ACTING

Play tryouts test talents of performers

BREE BISNETTE
staff reporter

In a few short minutes an extrovert must become a socially withdrawn girl, while a sober, calm person must transform into a ranting, slightly intoxicated young man.

Temporary personality alterations like these were not uncommon at play tryouts for "The Glass Menagerie" at the Manhattan Center for the Arts Monday and Tuesday evening.

Those who auditioned had to transport their minds back to the time period between the late 1930s and early 1940s. They had to imagine themselves as residents of the back-alley tenement in St. Louis where the play is set.

The poetic script by Tennessee Williams is centered on a mother's desire to help her shy, timid daughter, Laura, get out of the house and lead a normal life. The other two parts include Tom, the son, who serves as the narrator, and a gentleman caller, who pursues Laura.

The actors who tried out had about 10-15 minutes to review several pages of script before performing as one of the four characters in front of director Maggie Jackson and stage manager Paul Berger.

Jackson and Berger generally asked the actors to read several scenes from the play. They would stop the actors and give them tips about getting into character or the projection of their voices and then allow the actors to continue.

The directors wanted to see how the performers spot read, how they interacted with the audience and other cast members, and if they fit the part in general, said Geoff Scott, a Manhattan resident who auditioned Tuesday night.

"Auditions are difficult, because you only have a brief idea of what the character is like, and the director has their preconceived notions about what the character should be," Scott said.

There are some techniques that can help actors feel more natural playing roles during an audition, said Vanessa Vaughn, sophomore in theater, who tried out Monday evening.

"For a cold reading, I've found if you relate the character to something in your life, you can act most naturally," Vaughn said. "Then you just get into character and pretend the directors aren't there."

If an actor is chosen for the part, a more in-depth analysis of the character is necessary, Vaughn said.

"When you have to be a character for the entire play, you spend a lot of time learning to empathize," she said. "You have to study the background of your character, know their objective and how they're going to get it."

There is always the chance, however, that actors will not be selected for the role they desire.

"Acting is in my heart and soul," said Rachael Richardson, freshman undecided, who auditioned Monday night. "If I'm not chosen, I'll just learn from my mistakes, and try harder next time. I won't give up."

"The Glass Menagerie" will run Nov. 8-10 and Nov. 14-17. All shows will begin at 8 p.m.

Book chronicles life of philosopher

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

Paul Ricoeur, the subject of Charles Reagan's sixth book, was orphaned at 2 and a World War II prisoner of war. Ricoeur, a French philosopher, has dined with President Clinton and spent time with the Pope.

Charles Reagan, philosophy professor and executive assistant to President Jon Wefald, devoted his most recent book to Ricoeur's diverse life. He wrote "Paul Ricoeur: His Life and His Work," a book that chronicles Ricoeur's diverse life.

Ricoeur is famous in the United States, England and Germany. His books are the top-selling books from the University of Chicago Press, Reagan said.

"He is the major living French philosopher, without a doubt," Reagan said.

At 19, Reagan studied under Ricoeur in Paris, and their relationship has continued to grow ever since.

"I was impressed with his style," Reagan said.

At the end of the year Reagan studied under Ricoeur he bought Ricoeur's two most significant books. He decided to do his master's thesis on Ricoeur's first book.

Reagan and Ricoeur's relationship had begun. It was a student learning and growing from a professor's insight.

Ricoeur began teaching at the University of Chicago, where Reagan caught up with him and asked him to speak at K-State.

The relationship had evolved over the years into a professor-professor relationship.The two men were peers.

Reagan then did his sabbatical in Paris, staying in Ricoeur's home. He also used Ricoeur's home while at the University of Toulouse.

"Little by little I became his confidant," Reagan said.

Their relationship continued to flourish. Reagan started going to Paris in the summers and staying with Ricoeur.

The plant will also require a small landfill that will be used by the plant to dispose of silicate material.

The Farrar Corporation has a factory in Norwich.

The company makes iron castings for lawnmower parts, suspension bridge anchors, gear boxes, agricultural products, utility poles, anchors and a wide variety of more than 2,000 parts for many different customers.

Farrar also said he doesn't have any immediate plans to relocate the company headquarters in Manhattan, but there is a possibility that the headquarters will be here in the future.

City Manager Gary Greer said he has spent a lot of time researching the possibility of locating a plant like the one Farrar is proposing in Manhattan.

He said he has visited other similar plants, including Farrar's in Norwich, and found the Farrar plant is a well-managed and operated company.

"I am impressed with the Farrar's leadership and commitment it has shown to its customers and community," board member John Graham said.

Farrar chose Manhattan as a possible site for a new plant because of its local infrastructure, resources that are available from K-State and the Manhattan Area Technical College and the assistance that is provided by the City's MEDOFAB fund.

The plant will be located behind the McCall Pattern Company in Manhattan's Industrial Park.

"This is a great opportunity for Manhattan to have this plant," board member Dennis Mullin said.

Wildcats pluck Jayhawks 3-0

■ K-State coach Jim Moore takes a gamble and starts the Wildcats' reserves.

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

K-State improved its record to 14-2 Wednesday with a 3-0 victory over the Kansas Jayhawks.

The Wildcats opened the match with their reserves on the floor.

Coach Jim Moore said the team had run a drill in practice in which the starters had to score three points to the reserves' two. When the reserves won, they earned the right to start.

But after Kansas took a 5-13 lead, Moore put the starters back in.

"They found out it was a different world entirely," Moore said.

"The worst-case scenario, from my perspective, happened — they had to be pulled. My biggest fear was the nervousness."

With the regular starters back on the floor, senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk took control of the match, serving eight consecutive points, capped off by a pair aces, to knot the score at 13-13. Freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown blasted a kill from the left to win the first game 15-13.

But the starters were not quite as clean in the second game. Neither team could take control, seesawing to 5-5 before K-State closed out the game with a 10-2 run.

"We just weren't playing very well," Brown said of the second game. "We weren't ready for balls that came to us, and that's what we've really been working on in practice."

The Cats returned to form in the third game, taking a 4-0 lead out of the gate. The Jayhawks would score only twice before K-State won the final game 15-2.

Moore said the Cats could have played better, but he wasn't disappointed in the performance.

"I don't think we played that poorly," he said. "We played a little raggedy in the second game, but did well after that."

When the Wildcats led 14-2, senior swing hitter Kelli Luther made her first appearance of the season, coming in to serve for DeClerk. Luther is still recovering from a knee injury and hopes to return later in the season.

"When the team was warming up, and I was kind of pseudo-warming up, before the match, Jim pulled me aside and asked if I thought I could serve," Luther said.

Luther said she was being fitted with a brace next week and hopes to be able to practice soon.

K-State returns to action in Ahearn Field House at 7 p.m. Friday to face Oklahoma.

TOIE YOUNG, play-set hitter, blocks a shot with the support of Valerie Wieck, middle blocker, in the second game of the match. K-State swept KU 3-0 Wednesday night at Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats improved their record to 14-2 with the victory.

Netters headed for postseason, but playing at home is the test

In volleyball, like any other collegiate sport, there are really three seasons.

The non-conference season serves as preparation. Players get accustomed to each other in a match setting, and newcomers are worked into the rotation.

But for teams who play in power conferences — conferences such as the Big 12 — their record against league opponents will be the primary factor determining whether they qualify for the third season, the NCAA Tournament.

The beginning of conference play last weekend was a milestone for K-State in a number of ways. Not only was it the dawn of a new conference, it was the Wildcats' coming out party, as they defeated Colorado in Boulder for the first time in the program's history.

MY VIEW

Dan LEWERENZ

"That was a big win," K-State volleyball coach Jim Moore said.

"That is such a huge win for the program in that we were the favored team against a team with a tradition, a team that's been to the NCAA Tournament seven years running."

But more important is Friday night's match against the Oklahoma Sooners.

Why? Are the Sooners a better team than Colorado? Will a victory over OU catapult the Cats into the national spotlight?

No. The match is more important because it's here.

Earning a spot in postseason play requires more than just winning matches. A team must win the right matches at the right times in the right places.

No. 6 Nebraska and No. 8 Texas, who faced each other in last year's national championship match, are the Big 12's only sure things come tournament time.

Sure, more teams will get in. Two other conference teams are ranked, No. 15 Texas A&M and No. 24 Texas Tech, and K-State sits just outside the poll in the 26th spot. Oklahoma, Colorado and Iowa State are sure to vie for a place in the postseason as well.

That means matches against these schools are critical. The Wildcats will not be judged against Michigan State or Pacific or Louisville. They'll be judged against Aggies and Red Raiders, Buffaloes and Sooners and Cyclones.

And any coach will tell you if you want your program to win the respect game, you have to win at home.K-State has beaten arch-rival Kansas handily. Fans showed up, mainly for a chance to rub salt into as many Jayhawk wounds as possible, but that's over now.

It's time to think about Oklahoma. It's crucial for the Cats' postseason hopes that they win this match. It's crucial that you be there to help them.

When K-State faced Nebraska last weekend, it did so in front of 3,717 fans. When you take out the K-State faithful, that comes to about 3,650 red-clad crazies doing everything they can to distract the Wildcats.

How did K-State respond?

"Sometimes it gets us excited and gets us going," senior co-captain Kate DeClerk said. "Even if they are cheering against us, the crowd can really get us going."

Imagine what that crowd can do when it's on your side.

Wildcat fans, I know you can do it. You love your sports. You take pride in their success. You responded to a $3-per-game increase in football-ticket prices by setting a new record for student-ticket sales.

> "And any coach will tell you if you want your program to win the respect game, you have to win at home."

Now it's time to spread the spirit — and you can do it without spreading the wealth.

The powers that be have scheduled the match for 7 p.m., giving you plenty of time to celebrate in nearby Aggieville after the match. And since students get in free with a student ID, your weekly allowance for brain-cell destruction isn't depreciated.

For years, K-State volleyball enthusiasts have envisioned a future when we could challenge the tradition-rich programs of Colorado and Nebraska — even beat them.

They envisioned a future when K-State would push for a national ranking and a spot in the NCAA tournament.

They envisioned a future in which thousands of K-Staters would make Ahearn Field House shake with the excitement of K-State volleyball.

The future is now, and it lies in your hands.

▶ COLLEGE FOOTBALL

Polls don't mean everything

DAVE GUNTHER
contributing writer

A college poll, whether it is the Associated Press poll, or the CNN/USA Today Coaches' poll, is not as accurate as football fans might think.

Polls affect postseason football play. It is usually where a team sits in the polls at the end of the season that determines which bowl it will attend, if any.

Coach Bill Snyder said he doesn't vote in the coaches' poll anymore.

"I dropped out of that a few years ago. I didn't know enough about my team, let alone everyone else's, and I spend all of my time studying us," he said.

Accuracy is what the polls try to show, the best team to the 25th-best team, but Snyder said he doesn't think the polls can be considered accurate.

"You're looking to make a selection of 40 or so teams to compare down to the top 25. I just don't know how you can know all those things," Snyder said.

Snyder said not knowing how one team would compare to another is the main reason he made the decision not to vote.

"I don't know anything about North Carolina right now," Snyder said. "They played well against Florida State, but I don't know if they are the eighth-best team, or the 10th best-team, or the ninth-best team. I don't have a clue."

The Associated Press poll is essentially structured the same as the coaches' poll, but 67 sports writers from across the country vote instead.

Bob Dutton, a Kansas City Star writer, is one of those reporters. He said he takes many things into consideration when it comes to voting.

"I look at wins and losses, strength of schedule, where the teams play, things like that," he said.

Because each reporter is from a different part of the country, concerns are often raised questioning the bias toward teams.

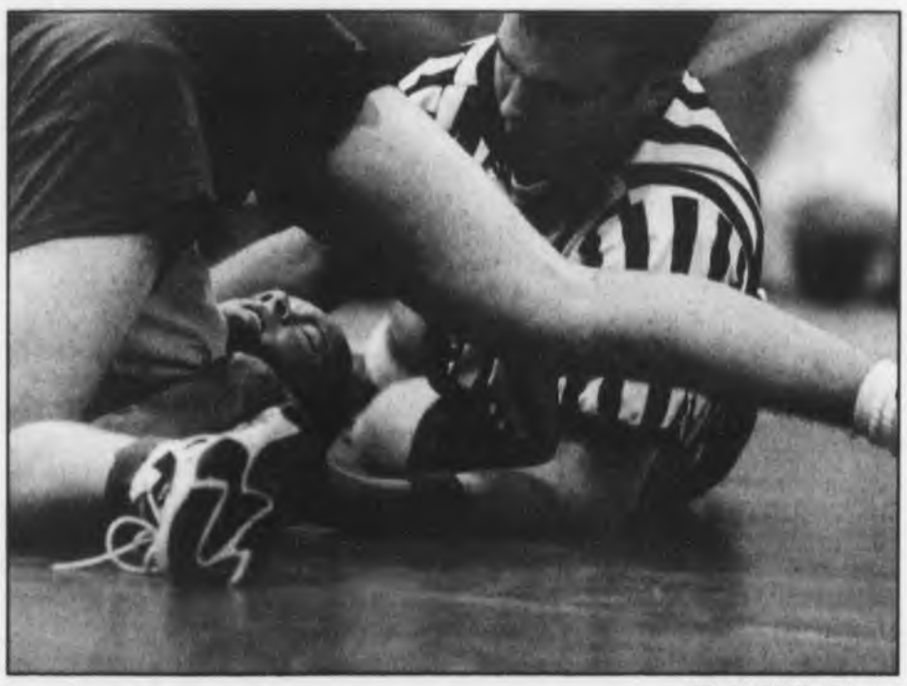
"Oh, sure," Dutton said, "but it's not always a bias in favor. I might see Colorado more often than, say, ASU, but I see their faults more often, too. Whereas I may just know that Arizona State is playing well."

Asked which poll he thinks is more accurate, Dutton didn't hesitate to answer.

"I don't think any of them are accurate," he said.

"The AP poll is the older poll, and I think is more accepted, basically because the media makes it. Arizona State beat Nebraska. Nebraska is still ahead of them in the coaches' poll. Why is that?"

Good question. It raises a concern about why Wake Forest isn't ranked ahead of No.22 Northwestern right now in the AP poll, even though it defeated Northwestern earlier this season.



Dustin Creek, senior in criminology, said he thinks the polls are just to give the public a rough idea on where its favorite teams stand.

"I think that no poll can be accurate," Creek said. "No one truly knows which team is the best until they play each other."

Sydney Stech, junior in human resource management, said she uses the polls for just one thing.

"I just look to see if we're ahead of KU. That's the most important thing. Isn't it?"

Championships to begin

SHANE MCCORMICK

One of the more-popular intramural activities has started at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

K-State's top wrestlers gathered to participate in the annual wrestling meet, finishing up the semi-final round in each weight division Wednesday night.

Some of the most fierce competition will be in the finals of the fraternity division.

Many state high-school champions are matched up against each other in the fraternity division.

In the 142-pound division, Brian Thompson of Delta Tau Delta advanced to the finals where he will face Dave Woolf of Alpha Tau Omega.

Woolf said he didn't get off to the start he would have liked.

"I got a little bit caught off guard," he said. "I was a little bit scared in the beginning, but I wrestled pretty good on my feet tonight."

Woolf said although he didn't get to see Thompson wrestle, he knows what it will take for a victory.

"I'm going to have to be good on my feet. If I don't take him down, I won't win."

Another key matchup in the fraternity division will come in the 196-pound division. Two-time state champion Matt Holovach will face Jeff Wente.

In the independent division, the final match in the 166-pound division will pit Mike Bammes against Chad Koster.

Koster had one thing to say about his semi-final match.

"I'm thinking that I am out of shape," he said. "I would say my chances are slim to none."

▶ CROSS COUNTRY

Women's team jumps into rankings

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

For only the second time in his tenure at K-State, cross country coach Terry Drake has a squad ranked in the top 25.

In rankings released Monday, the NCAA National Women's Cross Country poll ranked the Wildcats at No. 20.

K-State is ranked second in District V, with only Big 12 opponent Missouri ranked ahead of it. The Tigers are No. 14 nationally.

Drake said the rankings are important for two reasons.

If K-State finishes first or second in district competition, it receives an automatic invitation to the National Championships. If the Wildcats finish third or fourth, the school is placed into a pool.

From the pool, a committee will choose six additional schools, based on national rankings.

"It's certainly a good thing to be ranked," Drake said, "and to stay there."

K-State has been ranked once before since Drake came to K-State, but the ranking only lasted a week.

To ensure falling out doesn't happen again, Drake said he has told the team it has a responsibility to start doing well.

"Now that we're there, we have to stay focused on where we want to get," he said. "I told them, 'Let's not stop. This is just a starting point.'"

The women's squad has competed well in recent weeks, finishing second at KU's Jayhawk Invitational and taking first last Saturday at its own KSU Invitational.

Michigan was the team that beat K-State out for first place in Lawrence, but Wildcat Samantha McNamara won the individual competition.

Michigan is ranked No. 9 in the latest poll.

▸ REVIEW

Find classic cartoons on the World Wide Web

website review

I know the only reason people read the newspaper, besides to read my weekly reviews, is to catch their favorite comic-strips.

Every week, Darin Siefkes, senior in history, and radio and television, will review various sites on the World Wide Web. Do you know an interesting site, have a question or want to comment?
E-mail Siefkes at (wings@ksu.ksu.edu.)

This week I explore the comics that are online and free, the way all newspapers should be.

UExpress (http://www.uexpress.com/)

To find the best comics around, we must look to the syndicators.

Syndicators are the people who sell comics and columns to newspapers.

UExpress has an impressive amount of titles, which makes its homepage a must see.

Overall UExpress has the bigger names in comics including "For Better or For Worse," "Foxtrot," "Garfield" and the greatest comic still in print — "Doonesbury."

The comics are archived for a two-week period so surfers don't have to visit every day.

There are promotional pages and games on several of the comics.

The most entertaining is "Calvin & Hobbes'" Snow Art Gallery. "Foxtrot" has a difficult concentration game and should be only tried by true fans.

A word of warning: all of the comics are delayed usually two weeks to allow newspapers to print them.

On a few comics, such as "Calvin & Hobbes," there is a delay of 10 years.

But if you don't mind being a little behind in the story, then it isn't a problem.

My favorite section, not counting "Doonesbury," is the Bad Golfers Association homepage.

This page is designed for people who believe the point in golf is how quickly they can empty the cooler.

It has a great game that requires Shockwave to play.

The Far Side Daily (http://www.ausweb.com.au/FarSide/)

Even though Gary Larson has retired from "The Far Side," the faithful remember it well.

There isn't much more to say about this page.

It lives up to its claims of providing Larson's "Far Side" comic daily.

Kev's World Daily Cartoon (http://207.154.136.90/kevs-world/)

Kevin Nichols is one of the best online cartoonists.

This page is updated daily with Kev's views on the world. He always keeps a week's worth of cartoons here, just in case one is not enough.

Deep Thought of the Day (http://www.eecs.nwu.edu/cgi-bin/deepthought)

For all of you Jack Handy fans, this is a great place to visit. Once there, surfers who are patient enough to wait 40 seconds will be rewarded with another deep thought.

This will continue indefinitely. So enjoy.

United Media (http://www.unitedmedia.com/UM_home.html)

Even those serious-minded engineers will jump to look at this site.

It contains the patron saint of Durland Hall — St. Dilbert.

For those who don't know who Dilbert is, ask any engineer, computer person or disgruntled postal employee.

They will fill you in on what you are missing.

There is a two-week delay before the cartoons are posted on the Internet.

They stay up for two weeks before they are replaced.

The Dilbert Zone contains lots of info about Dilbert's creator.

An encrypted online ordering form is available, and Dogbert, just to name a few cool things here.

The other big section on this site is everyone's favorite beagle, Snoopy.

It keeps a two-week archive on "Peanuts."

The Dilbert Zone also includes descriptions of all the characters, and discussions with Charles Schulz.

This is also the source for information for "Peanuts" fans on what is happening with Snoopy and the "Peanuts" gang around the world.

Avenue has been put before the state legislature, although it hasn't passed yet. He estimated would the garage be put on hold until 1999.

By the end of the discussion, all administrators had answered questions about events going on in their department, although the most questions were about the library.

"The library has been under construction since the June of 1994. What students don't realize is that $5 million of their fees are in this project," Hobrock said.

He talked mainly about the new services within the addition, including a 24-hour study area with high-quality study seats. High-quality was defined as comfortable, in a quiet area and not under an air vent.

"Before, there were 120 seats that we consider high-quality study seats," he said. "We have added 200 high-quality study seats in the new building. There are more people in the library today than there has been in 10 years."

> "You tend to hear people complain about fees, parking, the Union, the library renovations. If they have a question, it's best to just ask it."

> SENIOR IN FOOD SCIENCE

He said there was a possibility of adding a food cart inside the library but wanted student suggestions on how to keep the library and books free from spills.

The suggestions ranged from only allowing covered drinks, such as water bottles, to trusting students to be responsible for their own messes.

Sporing said the event was successful and wished that more students would get involved.

"You tend to hear people complain about fees, parking, the Union, the library renovations. If they have a question, it's best to just ask it," Sporing said. "This is an excellent opportunity for students."

weeks." Clinton said no specific date was set for completing the talks. But he said they agreed "to start immediately on a full-time basis, with a priority on speed and a priority on Hebron."

"This government is going to have to do the same thing for the Palestinians. And until they do, we won't cross the threshold," the official said, briefing reporters at the White House on condition of anonymity.

The Palestinians again insisted on an immediate Israeli re-deployment in Hebron, but Netanyahu turned down the demand as impossible. Israeli sources said he also insisted the agreement on the town reached three years ago be renegotiated.

Netanyahu later said at a news conference that he would be willing to implement Israel's commitments, but only in a way that would not jeopardize the peace process.

Peace, he said, "is our compass, our map, our hope for our children and for the Palestinians, too."

REAGAN

Reagan was able to get biographical and philosophical perspectives through his personal interviews and leisure time with Ricoeur.

"Paul Ricoeur: His Life and His Work," contains a memoir of Reagan's experiences with Ricoeur. The memoir tells of Ricoeur's controversial resignation after a student protest at the University of Paris-Nanterre.

The book also has essays about Ricoeur's work and a philosophical essay by Reagan.

Reagan began researching his most recent work nearly 10 years ago. He worked on it during the summers, weekends and nights.

While writing the book, Reagan also compiled essays on books Ricoeur released.

"I turned up the heat the last couple of summers," Reagan said.

School defends policy in wake of suspension

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DAYTON, Ohio — School officials defended their suspension of a 13-year-old honor student who borrowed a packet of Midol from a friend, saying the girl violated the school's drug policy.

Erica Taylor, 13, took the over-the-counter pills from a classmate at Baker Junior High School in Fairborn, Ohio, because she felt less than good — but then decided not to take them.

When she was found out, the school suspended her for 10 days and ordering her to undergo a drug evaluation or possibly face expulsion.

"The more and more I thought about it, the more ridiculous it became," Taylor's father, Dan Taylor, said Tuesday.

The district's drug policy does not distinguish between legal and illegal or prescription and nonprescription drugs, said school spokeswoman Joy Paolo. Nonprescription drugs are only given to students who bring in signed permission slips from their parents.

"We're real comfortable with our policy, and it's pretty much in line with what most districts do," Paolo said. "I believe the general public wants safe, drug-free schools."

Midol, which contains acetaminophen and caffeine, is taken to relieve cramps, headaches and other symptoms related to menstrual periods.

Erica, who had perfect attendance last year and made the honor roll each of the past three years, can reduce her suspension by attending drug screening for $100 with later visits costing $90.

"I want to get back to school," she said. "I don't want to fail eighth grade."

Senate requests projects

Student SENATE

■ City/University Projects Fund wish list includes security cameras, stoplights.

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate passed a wish list of four projects Thursday for which it would like the City/University Projects Fund to pay.

The resolution will be forwarded to President Jon Wefald, the City/University Projects Fund Committee and the city commission.

"This is our wish list, and please understand that if Wefald desires, he can have five different things on this list," said Tracey Mann, chairman of the Governmental Relations Committee, which authored the resolution.

The list included improved lighting, security cameras, crosswalks and stoplights, but not a parking garage, which was in the first draft.

After lengthy debate and voting on three amendments to the resolution, the Senate passed it and moved to an amendment to the Student Governing Association funding regulations for the student activity fee.

The amendment called for the Allocations Committee to be able to give groups funding for supplies such as poster board without having to get the approval of the Senate.

Chris Avila, graduate senator and former allocations chairman, tried to amend the amendment so only campus-wide groups could be allocated money for supplies.

Avila said he was concerned certain organiza-

BLESSING man's best friends

PETS GATHER with their owners at the beginning of the blessing. After a round of songs, members of the various campus ministries went around and blessed every animal in attendance. The blessing was outside Memorial Stadium. Below, Sox receives a blessing from Father Brad Sterrett of St. Isidore's University Chapel. Mike Burgoon owns Sox.

St. Francis Day blessing of the animals attracts dogs; rabbits, hamsters join festivities at Memorial Stadium

Collies, Chihuahuas, dachshunds and dalmations joined rabbits, retrievers, hamsters and humans at the annual St. Francis Day blessing-of-the-animals ceremony Thursday evening at Memorial Stadium.

Members of various campus ministries participated.

More than 25 dogs of every kind came to the ceremony with their owners. Many of the animals belonged to children, including the two rabbits and Harriet the Hamster.

Karen Wiseman, one of the officiating clergy, thought she was only going to read, but there were so many animals she got to help with the blessing.

"This is really amazing. It's fun to see the love, especially the kids' relationship with their pets," Wiseman, from the United Methodist campus ministry, said.

Most of the crowd joined in on the responsive readings and sang along with the songs. The dogs barked and howled, with and without guitar accompaniment.

One dog, apparently deciding he did not want to be blessed, ran away — followed by an unhappy-looking owner.

Carla Johnson brought her puppy, Jake, whom she described as a happy dog. Jake, a small, black puppy with a lolling, pink tongue, seemed unfazed by the commotion around him.

"He needs all the help he can get," Johnson, a graduate student in swine nutrition, said.

Some brought cameras, and some even videotaped the blessing. Magdelene Ting had her hands full with Baybee, an Australian shepherd who seemed to be looking for an excuse to misbehave.

"She needed a little extra blessing," Ting, a senior in electrical engineering, said.

John DeBuy held Bubba, his black-and-white dwarf Dutch rabbit. DeBuy said Bubba was rejected by his mother at birth, and he had been handling him since he was about 4 hours old.

"He's a gentle rabbit. I used to massage him like his mother was supposed to, so he wouldn't die," DeBuy, a Seven Dolors Grade School student, said.

Despite the howling and whining, the event ended quietly. One by one the animals were blessed, and the crowd dispersed slowly.

Speaker talks about future challenges

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

America is like a family, and, like any family, it needs to learn to communicate, Sharon Pratt-Kelly said.

"The American family is losing its sense of community. It used to be you got rewarded for your effort, then gave back to the community," she said.

Pratt-Kelly, the mayor of Washington, D.C., in the early '90s, was the keynote speaker for Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

She addressed more than 100 people at Forum Hall Thursday morning, telling them where she thinks the United States is as a country and where it is going.

"With a new century and a new millennium four years away, it seems as if every group has a problem with some other group," Pratt-Kelly said.

The old immigrants don't like the new immigrants. The have-nots have always been angry at the haves, but now the haves are upset with the have-nots because of welfare and homelessness, she said.

Middle-aged people want to trim the benefits of the seniors. Then there are the problems between men and the new women, Pratt-Kelly said.

"Differences in gender eclipsed everything else when it came to the Clarence Thomas hearings," she said.

If you want to rock people, mention the name Hillary Rodham Clinton, she said.

Pratt-Kelly said the first lady personifies the new woman, yet people such as Speaker of the House Newt Gingrich call her a bitch — via his mother and Connie Chung.

"This is the first lady of the land, but she's called a bitch," Pratt-Kelly said.

The problem of America's attitude toward working women dates back to 30 years ago, when women first entered the work force. Before that, most women did not work outside the home, so the community benefited.

Organizations such as the PTA and neighborhood associations flourished. You did not have to lock your doors. Everyone felt safer, she said.

"Thirty years ago when women entered the work force, no one asked what kind of changes and adjustments we would have to make," she said. "Women were told, 'You can do it all. You can be superwoman.' "

A woman could earn the bacon, cook the bacon and still look like Sharon Stone or Halle Berry. People expect one person to do it all in the family, but no one person can do it all, she said.

"No one should be surprised that we have problems. We should be surprised we don't have more," she said. "How do we sit around and pretend everything is hunky-dory and okey-dokey when people are left out of the photo albums and history books?"

The people of this country need to give each other's stories to each other, she said. Maybe then people would not need affirmative action, because they would not have unhealthy perceptions of each other.

"It's as if men colonized America, then vanquished the West and Fed-Exed us tickets to join them. You would think all women contributed was to sew a flag. I don't think so," Pratt-Kelly said.

Asian Americans are merely credited with laying a few railroad tracks in the Pacific Northwest. Hispanic Americans possibly played some role in the expansion of the Southwest.

The original American cousins supposedly traded Manhattan Island for a handful of beads. Today people embrace their holistic, spiritual practices but marginalize them in the annals of history, she said.

African Americans did not just go from slavery to the Civil Rights Movement.

"They defended the American dream even when it was denied them," she said.

"How on earth are we going to pull this all together?"

The situation in the United States is just like a family. It is a family. It is a very dysfunctional family, granted, but a family nevertheless, she said.

What does it take to really be a member of this family? To be legitimate members of the family, people need

Flint Hills to have national park

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Near the end of her 18-year tenure in the U.S. Senate, Sen. Nancy Landon Kassebaum, R-Kan., has finally gotten her wish for a national park in Kansas.

Legislation to create a national tallgrass prairie park in the Flint Hills passed in the Senate Thursday after passing the House on Saturday.

Kassebaum has made the tallgrass prairie park one of her main priorities as she finishes up her career in the Senate before returning to her Flint Hills ranch, which is near the new park.

President Clinton said in a statement Sunday that he would sign the legislation into law. The park was part of the Omnibus Parks and Public Lands Act.

The tallgrass prairie park is on 10,894 acres of the historic Z-Bar Ranch in Chase County. According to the legislation, the federal government will take control of 180 acres of the ranch, which include a limestone farmhouse, barn and one-room school. The remaining acreage is owned by the National Park Trust.

The bill also creates a local advisory committee, which will make recommendations to the National Park Service for possible uses for the park.

The Park Service plans to have a series of public hearings in Kansas for public input in the park's operation.

Board reviews progress of projects

■ Off-campus escort services, lighting, library projects discussed.

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

A report of the student off-campus escort service, campus lighting and the K-State/Manhattan Public Library projects were presented to the City/University Projects Fund Committee Thursday night.

In its first meeting since last February, the board heard reports on the various projects to which it allocated money last spring.

Ronnie Grice, director of the K-State Police, presented the status report on the student off-campus escort service.

Grice said the new student-escort service has been in operation since spring, and future plans include buying new supplies for the winter.

Mark Taussig, a facilities planning assistant for the University, reported the status of the campus lighting project. The lighting improvements include installing new lights, improving output of old lights and pruning trees around lights to improve their efficiency.

Taussig said the eight target areas where lighting needs to be improved have been identified by a group of students and faculty members.

The next step will be to install the lights in those areas.

The board also heard a report on a project that will help link Farrell Library and the Manhattan city libraries through the Internet.

Brice Hobrock, dean of Farrell Library, said two computers have already been installed in the Manhattan Public Library and are available for use to the public.

The next step in the project will be to coordinate sharing electronic databases between the two libraries.

NATION WORLD

• COMBAT EQUIPMENT RETURNED. The largest known theft of combat equipment from a U.S. military base was masterminded by a military surplus dealer who wanted to fuel a lucrative collectors' market. The dealer is accused of bribing two civilian workers with $38,000, a snowblower-equipped truck and a crane in exchange for their help moving $13 million worth of combat vehicles and equipment off the Fort McCoy base. Prosecutors on Wednesday announced the indictments of seven civilians in the thefts at Fort McCoy, a training base with 2,300 civilian employees and about 200 military personnel. No missiles or other weapons were stolen. Most of the equipment has been returned to Fort McCoy.

• RESPONSE FROM MID-EAST SUMMIT MIXED. As Israeli and Palestinian leaders shift their talks to the Middle East, their deep differences unresolved, questions are being raised whether the two-day Washington summit was worthwhile. Clinton thinks it was and so does Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. The Palestinians said the summit was a setback.

CAMPUS STATE

• HOLCOMBE TO SPEAK AT VERNON LARSON LUNCHEON. Anna C. Holcombe, associate professor of art, will speak at the 1996-97 Vernon Larson International Luncheon Series Monday at the Ramada Inn. The topic of the speech is "Ceramic Heaven: Italian Summer Program in Faenza, Italy." Reservations should be made at the Office of International Programs by today.

• KNAPP TO GIVE BIOLOGY LECTURE. Alan K. Knapp, associate professor of biology, with give a seminar, "Appreciating the Dynamics of a Tallgrass Prairie," at 4 p.m. today in Ackert 221.

• LAMBDA CHI ALPHA HELPS WITH FOOD DRIVE. Lambda Chi Alpha will sponsor a food drive to benefit the Flint Hills Bread Basket during the weeks of Oct. 6 through Nov. 2. There will be 220 chapters of the fraternity around the United States and Canada collecting non-perishable food during the same weekends.

• K-STATE COLLEGE NIGHT SET FOR MONDAY. The annual K-State College Night for area high school students will be at 7 p.m. on Monday, at the Holidome in Manhattan. Speakers will include Pat Bosco, dean of student life; Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance; and Carrie Cox, admissions representative.

• LOCKDOWN AT LANSING CONTINUES. About 900 prison inmates in the state's maximum-security unit will remain locked in their cells at least through the weekend. The Lansing inmates and about 250 inmates in Hutchinson had been locked in their cells following disturbances that stemmed from complaints about food.

SPORTS

• CARDINALS DOWN 5-4 TO PADRES. Tom Pagnozzi, who played on the 1987 World Series team before the Cardinals had several mediocre seasons, drove in the game-winner with a shot off reliever Trevor Hoffman's glove in the eighth inning Thursday, giving St. Louis a 5-4 win over the San Diego Padres and a 2-0 lead in their NL playoff series.

• UMPIRES SAY THEY WILL STRIKE TODAY. Baseball umpires, insisting there's no room for compromise, said they will strike Friday because of Roberto Almomar's continued presence in the playoffs. Lawyers for the umpires and baseball owners are to appear Friday in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia, where the American and National leagues have asked for an injunction that would prevent yet another baseball walkout.

CONCERT UPDATE

• DAVE MATTHEWS BAND CONCERT RESCHEDULED. The Dave Matthews Band concert has been rescheduled for 8 p.m. Oct. 28. The concert was originally scheduled for Sept. 13.

"The concert was postponed because of a death of one of the family members of the band," Todd Mitchell, of New West Contemporary, said.

The Dave Matthews Band will perform at Sandstone Amphitheatre as part of the Budweiser Concert Series.

The guest performer has not yet been announced.

"The special guest was Ben Harper, but we're not sure if it will still be them," Mitchell said.

Tickets from the Sept. 13 concert date will be honored at the Oct. 28 concert. Lawn-seat tickets are still available through Ticketmaster outlets, including Streetside Records in Aggieville.

"Ticket sales have been pretty much the same. It's an unfortunate situation, but Ticketmaster is pretty lenient. You can use tickets from the Sept. 13 concert for Oct. 28," Streetside employee Wayne Valentine said.

Saturday is the latest date Streetside can refund tickets for the Dave Matthews Band concert, Valentine said.

After Saturday, ticket holders will have to get a refund directly through Sandstone and Ticketmaster.

Christianne Miles at Sandstone Amphitheatre will handle refunds. She can be contacted at (913) 721-3400.

Kansas Farm Bureau undecided about endorsement

> That's one race that's still up in the air. We may not endorse a candidate until election day.
> • WARREN PARKER
> DIRECTOR OF KFB COMMUNICATIONS

JESS C. LOUK
staff reporter

Kansas Farm Bureau endorses candidates for state and national offices. But in a four-page statement sent to news media last month, KFB declined to endorse a 66th District candidate.

In fact, the list skipped from districts 65 to 67.

KFB, the state's largest lobbying group for farmers and ranchers, has more than 40,000 families of farmers and ranchers in its organization, said John Schlageck, publication services manager at KFB.

Jeff Peterson, the Republican challenger, and Sheila Hochhauser, the Democratic incumbent who is bidding for her fifth term, are running for state representative for the 66th District, which includes K-State.

"That's one race that's still up in the air. We may not endorse a candidate until election day," said Warren Parker, director of communications and public relations. "Sometimes we endorse, and sometimes we don't."

The KFB's grass-roots system has committees in 94 of Kansas' 105 counties, Parker said. The county committees recommend candidates based on voting records, constituent services, general philosophies, support for agriculture and other criteria.

For example, the state board endorsed Republican Kent Glasscock, whose 62nd District includes parts of Manhattan and Riley County.

Parker said the 10-person state board might decide not to follow a local board's recommendation for a variety of reasons. The state board is taking a close look at the race to determine what to do.

Peterson said he didn't seek KFB's endorsement, and Hochhauser said the Riley County committee endorsed her, even though it didn't send her a candidate survey for information.

"The local folks told me they didn't need it, because they've seen me and know I was good," she said.

Yet the state committee still has not decided to endorse her.

"I can't speak for them," said Hochhauser, seeking her fifth term in the Kansas House. "Everybody they endorse is a Republican. They did not endorse my Republican opponent. I think that speaks volumes."

KFB endorsed 20 Democrats for all state offices while supporting 89 Republicans.

KFB endorsed 23 Republicans and eight Democrats for the Kansas Senate.

KFB endorsed 66 Republicans and 12 Democrats for the Kansas House.

Peterson said he did not fill out the candidate survey because he is not interested in endorsements.

"Groups don't vote. Individuals vote," he said.

Peterson said he thought some groups don't endorse challengers because they don't want to take a chance on an unknown.

"If it's a tight race, a lot of those groups will stay out of it," Peterson said.

Union Station waiting for new franchise

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

Union Station is experiencing growing pains as the K-State Student Union expands.

It is adjusting to renovations and franchising changes in the Union.

When Professional Food-Service Management Inc. took the responsibilities of the Union Station this summer, menu items, prices and staffing all changed.

> We used to be like a family, and everything ran smooth. Now I dread coming to work.
> • JENNIFER TAYLOR
> SENIOR IN PHYSICS EDUCATION

"We're in a transition period right now," said Paul Stolle, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Stolle said with the possibility of a food franchise coming, the future of Union Station and the role it will play in food service is questionable.

Bernard Pitts, Union director, said new management is not causing the changes.

"They would have taken place anyway. We're putting franchises in, because that's what students want," Pitts said.

He said the programs in Union Station have been put in place to get by until a franchise comes in.

"We're spending a lot of time on the brand concept, and maybe we're not spending as much attention to the success of Union Station. But you have to give change a chance," Pitts said.

The employees are noticing the changes taking place since PFM took over.

"They've cut our hours, cut the menu down and raised the prices," Juan Bayolo, senior in biology, said. "There has been a noticeable loss in customers, because the menu has been cut down to salads and sandwiches."

Stolle said there is a limited menu because Union Station doesn't have the ventilation to grill or deep-fry a variety of items.

Stolle attributes the price increase to the menu change.

"This is only short-term," Stolle said. "Hopefully a franchise will come in and take over."

The staff has found a lot to complain about regarding the current management.

"The changes have affected morale," Jennifer Taylor, senior in physics education, said. "We used to be like a family, and everything ran smooth. Now I dread coming to work."

Taylor said staffing is low, tables don't get cleaned, customers don't get waited on as quickly, and the management doesn't even seem to care if it makes money or not.

"It just doesn't seem like they're being fair. Some employees that started at the beginning of this year started out at the minimum-wage increase of $4.75, while employees who had been working there before did not receive the increase until the Oct. 1 wage change," Bayolo said.

Stolle had no comment on whether he thought this was fair to employees who had been working there before this year.

"We were well over-staffed last year, and there was no managerial supervision," Stolle said.

"We're just trying to run a tighter operation."

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Not everyone's thoughts will be on Nebraska game Saturday

K-State's football team will take the field against Nebraska Saturday.

Fans will crowd into KSU Stadium in anticipation of a defensive showdown.

Those without tickets will be glued to their televisions Saturday afternoon to watch K-State, the Big 12 North Division's only undefeated team, take on Nebraska.

WHY WE CARE

The Collegian staff would like to extend our hopes and thoughts to Coach Bob Cope and his family. He will be missed at Saturday's game.

But with all those players, coaches and fans involved in the game, there is one person who might not be able to make it.

Co-defensive coordinator Bob Cope was hospitalized Wednesday because of cancer.

The disease has a very good chance of keeping Cope off the field and in the hospital Saturday — if not for the rest of the season.

We at the Collegian would like to extend our deepest sympathies to Coach Cope, his wife Jimmie and daughter Susan and the rest of the members of the Cope family.

We also want the family to know our thoughts are with them during this time and hope Cope pulls through with flying colors.

It's been said Cope is a fighter.

It's been said he looks at everything in a humorous light.

And through all the pain, Cope still wants to fight his way to the gridiron Saturday to show his support of the Wildcats.

K-State fans, now more than ever, need to show their support of Cope and the team.

The team might use this tragedy as motivation to have the best game of its history.

Or, because of the tragedy, the Cats might find it difficult to focus on the task at hand. And who could blame them?

Remember a few things as you find your seat at the game or as you fumble around for the remote control to find ABC.

Remember as long as you never give up the fight, you're a winner.

Remember life is supposed to be fun. And like Cope, try to find a way to look at the lighter side of things.

Just remember what the players might be going through if you boo them for mental mistakes.

And most importantly, remember there are more important things than football games.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

WORD GAMES

Sometimes words speak louder than actions

MY

Jeremy STEPHENS

Within the past decade, there has been a marked change in how America and its politicians structure debate.

Gone are Lincoln-Douglas style debates, in which two people with opposing ideas square off and explain their positions. Gone are the days when enough Americans would take interest in this kind of debate for it to justify its occurrence.

The reason is not that important, because it will not be corrected any time soon. Pick a social malady: sound-bite television, rising divorce rates or even the depletion of the spotted owl.

Today, debate occurs within the context of code words, such as extremist, draconian or fundamentalist. While these words mean roughly the same thing they always did in obscure academic publications, in everyday language they now possess a different dimension of meaning.

> "The worst thing that could happen in a campaign is for a politician to be branded as a liberal, a conservative, or even worse, an extremist."

Consider the following example:

Politician A: "We would like to see some reductions in the size of the increase of growth of some welfare programs."

Politician B: "We find these reductions in the size of the increase of some welfare programs to be extremist and draconian."

While this exact conversation never occurred, I'll use it to it to point out how the use of words in cases such as this one is leading to the marring of the English language.

The American Heritage College Dictionary defines extremist as "one who advocates or resorts to measures beyond the norms, especially in politics."

In contemporary debate, the word has come to mean that which is conservative or that which is not liberal.

The same thing could be said of other words that catch the attention of the public, and are doing a disservice to our language.

A secondary effect of misusing the language is many people are starting to believe the use of these words is enough to win an argument or prove a point.

This is the most dangerous result of using words to prove points and win votes. Many people will assume an idea or group is not in their best interest on the basis that another politician or group simply labeled it extremist.

While this word really means nothing in today's language, it still carries enough weight to influence those who believe in the guiding wisdom of a few spoken words from a few politicians.

This also takes a toll upon any kind of debate, because any idea, no matter how insightful, can be derailed simply because an opponent labels it as draconian or fundamentalist.

And you thought only one party caused gridlock.

This misuse of language is also beginning to erode the fundamental differences between liberal and conservative candidates. As we are in an election year, it will become evident that candidates are unwilling to position themselves on any issue.

With the exception of a few states, the most important goal in the eyes of candidates is to position themselves as moderates, no matter what they believe.

Thus begins the race to see who can be the most moderate, where moderate means not having a stand on anything, but ready to shake hands and kiss babies.

The worst thing that could happen in a campaign is for a politician to be branded as a liberal, a conservative, or even worse, an extremist.

This is why President Clinton signed welfare reform into law just weeks ago.

Polling indicated the bill was perceived as a set of moderate reforms.

Notwithstanding the political ideal of making presidential decisions based on polling data, Clinton, left to his own designs, would have vetoed the bill.

And, according to the Wall Street Journal, while at the Democratic Convention, Hillary Clinton said her husband will move to repeal those portions of the bill he deems unfair. Words are a wonderful thing.

Maybe they have become more harmful than sticks and stones.

Fan support will play big role in Saturday's game

Editor,

Several sources have indicated the key to the Arizona State win against Nebraska was the crowd.

Not only did it pump up the players, but it threw off Nebraska, which inevitably took them out of the game. You can count on our football team giving 200 percent on every play. Let's give them a 200-percent return from the crowd.

If you see Chris Canty or Joe Gordon raising their palms to the heavens, then we aren't doing our job as the greatest fans in the Big 12. I challenge every fan in the stands to make that stadium so loud on Saturday that the guys never have to waste their energy on getting the crowd into it.

Furthermore, white shirts with purple on them don't cut it in a sea of red. Unfortunately there will be plenty of red shirts in the stadium, so do your very best to wear purple, purple, purple.

To any of your readers who sold out K-State by putting Nebraska fans in our stadium: I sincerely hope you live to regret it! Go Cats! May you all have the best game of your lives Saturday against Nebraska.

Feminism isn't about hating men; it's about demanding equal treatment for everyone

I was hanging my unshaven legs out of the car window, meditating on the sound of the wind making the little hairs dance and suddenly the world didn't seem like such a desperate place.

Then I thought of the overwhelming majority of American women who will never experience the exhilaration of allowing their hair to grow where it naturally grows, and the world returned to a doomed mini-mall of designer this and custom-made that.

This is a trivial example of what feminism has meant to me, and this is not to say that all feminists don't shave their legs or that people who don't shave are all feminists.

Images of unshaven legs and burning bras are only symbols of the challenging of norms that burden and inconvenience women and capitalize on primarily male-constructed media representations of femininity.

Manifestations of this sexism are apparent in the $33-billion dieting industry, $20-billion cosmetic industry, $300-million cosmetic surgery industry and the $8-billion pornography industry as well as in the 40 percent of female smokers who smoke only to maintain their figures.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

I spent years as a closet feminist before I finally began to identify myself as one. It all began with a dictionary where I discovered that feminism is the doctrine advocating social and political rights for women EQUAL to those of men, or the advocacy of the political, social and economic equality of men and women.

What finally won me over was when I read feminists' approach to feminism, as opposed to relying on the non-feminists' depiction that tends to make mainstream headlines.

If gender did not serve as a basis of discrimination and inequality, I would not be a feminist. With the exception of issues of race, sexual orientation and class, I don't see a real need for advocates of men's rights.

These are the most common questions about feminism I get. I'd just like to clear up a few of these misconceptions.

Q: Are you like one of those like psycho femi-Nazis who wants to castrate guys for whistling at women?

A: Actually there is no correlation between male bashing and feminism. Lorena Bobbitt was not a feminist activist and to my knowledge, no feminist has ever participated in terrorist acts against men.

Q: If you're a feminist, would you like be offended if I like opened a door for you?

A: Spare me the superficial gestures of your generosity. If you want to do a woman a favor, don't open a door for her; become an advocate for women's rights. If you're opening doors for men as well as women, I'm not complaining, but if you're only opening doors for women, why wouldn't you open a door for a man?

Q: Are you one of those man-hating lesbians?

A: Feminism is not about hating men. It is about defending women's rights. Men seem quick to take the emphasis of the women's movement off of womyn and shift it to men.

Q: You're not ugly. Why would you want to be a feminist?

A: I just wanted an excuse not to shave my legs. No, seriously, it is typical that men feel the need to reduce the women's movement to some kind of fashion statement.

Q: Did you know women already got the right to vote?

A: That was only the beginning. Men wouldn't settle for the remaining injustices. Why should women? And it's too bad the ballots include so few candidates who represent women, usually because women are socialized to avoid occupations of substance, political power or leadership.

And it's too bad the working class can't just step out of the office to register and then again to actually vote. Instead it costs money to vote, because it costs money to take time off.

And it costs money to be free. It costs money and time — which costs money to have a voice. It costs money to use the courts. It costs money to take time off to use the courts.

Democracy is defined as the equality of rights, opportunity and treatment. By definition, what could be more democratic then feminism?

A capitalist democracy is only a theoretical democracy, because it costs money to use that freedom.

As long as women as well as minorities are paid less for the same work, are discouraged socially or are economically disabled from educational preparation for entering the work force, how dare we call ourselves a democracy?

How is it that within a democracy, an average of 50,000 new charges of discrimination are filed every year with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission?

And the law is at the mercy of so-called representative government, where women make up 52 percent of the American population but have fewer than a quarter of the seats in Congress and make up only one of 50 governors.

Every 10-18 seconds a woman is battered and 11 women die every day from domestic violence, yet only 10 states have laws mandating arrests for domestic violence.

Family values in the United States includes that by the age of 18 one-third of all women will have experienced sexual abuse, and by the age of 14, one-fourth of all girls will have experienced sexual abuse.

These are not crimes happening to people who just happen to be women. These crimes are targeted at women because they are women. Until we recognize these are issues of misogyny as well as crime, we are only dealing with the symptoms of the societal infection of sexism.

"The Today Show" blamed the women's movement for the rise in the population of homeless women, but more than half of these women (the fastest-growing segment of homeless) are refugees of domestic violence, and a third of them seeking emergency shelters each year can't find them.

Regardless of any substantial margin of error, is there any question that feminism — the advocacy of equality — is not still in demand?

Canadian novelist Margaret Atwood once asked a male friend why men felt threatened by women. He said, "They are afraid women will laugh at them."

She then asked a group of women why they felt threatened by men. They answered, "We're afraid of being killed."

Forum focuses on wildlife fees

Twelve candidates or their official representatives attended a Riley County Fish & Game Association board meeting Thursday night at Days Inn to participate in a question-and-answer political forum.

The candidates were asked questions and were given one minute to express their views. One question asked how the candidate would propose to provide adequate funding for conservation and outdoor recreational activities.

Two main resolutions were presented: to either implement user fees on hunters and fisherman or raise funds through the sale of license plates.

Some candidates, such as Sheila Hochhauser and Jeff Peterson, favored using a combination of both methods. Other candidates, such as Ron Henneberg, opposed the user fees.

"All of us are users of the environment, whether we fish, hunt or whether we just have a bird feeder in our backyard. We need to find a way to get people besides the hunters, fishers and campers to be involved," Henneberg said.

The last question asked for candidates' views on gun control. All the candidates except Ruth Schrum, Democratic candidate for 22nd District in the state Senate, said they opposed gun control, or they did not support any repeal of the laws.

"I do not support the Brady Bill, nor do I support the concealed-carrying bill," Schrum said.

After answering the final question, each candidate was given two minutes to present a closing statement, which most used to thank the Riley County Fish & Game Association and ask for its support Nov. 5.

Health-insurance policy proposed

Kari Brown
staff reporter

Insurance might soon be mandatory for K-State students, according to the proposed student health plan.

The Student Health Advisory Committee met Thursday with G-M Underwriters Agency representatives to discuss a statewide campus health-insurance program.

This health-insurance policy is only a proposal, and other companies are submitting bids for a new K-State student health-insurance plan, Amy Donahy, SHAC chair, said.

SHAC has not yet discussed it. It is reviewing the current insurance plan.

"We are evaluating what we have now," Lannie Zweimiller, Lafene Health Center director, said.

If every Kansas Board of Regents school accepts this proposal, the student premium will drop to about $370.

Currently, students voluntarily enroll and choose between the comprehensive plan, which is $987 annually, and the $613 basic plan.

If the regents accepts the proposed plan, student insurance rates could be cut by as much as two-thirds, Dan Newman, G-M Underwriters agency representative, said.

"Transition into the program might be difficult, but it would significantly lower the premiums for K-State students. We are getting the same coverage for a lower premium," Donahy said.

Many students are covered by their parents' plans, and it is easier to just to pay for the college plan, Chris Nowland, G-M Underwriters Agency representative, said.

All students would be included in this plan. During enrollment, insurance would be issued to students who don't have proof of other coverage. If students are protected by another plan, they can waiver the insurance.

About 25 percent of K-State's students would be expected to take the new insurance, Newman said.

Band 7even entertains audience with unique style, individualism

BLAIN FISHER/Collegian

WAYNE VALENTINE gets the crowd involved during a jazz concert Wednesday night. Valentine and two other members of 7even entertained listeners with modern jazz and 1970s funk.

Jess Louk
staff reporter

James Brown, the godfather of soul himself, would have been proud to be in Union Station Wednesday night.

Manhattan's self-described funk band, 7even, had the Union Station jumping with its unique style. Some of the band's influences include Grand Central Funk and Sly and the Family Stone.

The quartet's individual talents were evident as the performance progressed. Bassist Eric Thomas reduced his bass to a toy as he shredded the chords to the audience's delight. One hardly noticed that guitarist Carlos Henderson was late.

"You can't live without the bass. The bass is the foundation. No foundation, no house," Wayne Valentine, lead vocalist and piano player, said to the crowd during one of Thomas' solos.

Valentine entertained the crowd as well as he played his instrument.

He walked through the crowd with his headset microphone on, coaxing them to sing along. The whole place was shaking to "C'est la Vie."

During "Stop on By," a 1970s hit, Valentine's fingers danced over the keyboard keeping the audience's heads swinging and their hands clapping. A permanent grin was stapled to his lips for most of the performance.

"We always have fun when we do this. You don't mind if we have a little fun, do you?" Valentine said to the crowd.

There simply was no better way to spend your Wednesday evening.

7even's members' ability to play off one another was enthralling. A simple glance from Valentine to drummer Ellis Thomas, and the song's beat would swing into a completely new rhythm.

7even will play Oct. 12 at 12th Street Pub. More delightful funk is only a couple of weeks away. If you haven't seen 7even make the pilgrimage to Aggieville, check it out.

Football assistant hospitalized

Cope

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

K-State co-defensive coordinator Bob Cope was hospitalized Wednesday at Mercy Health Center because of complications from cancer.

Cope learned about the cancer last week. He had visited with his doctor because he was concerned about bone spurs, but a series of tests revealed the disease.

Cope said to Baylor head football coach Chuck Reedy Monday that the news was a complete surprise. The doctors told Cope if it weren't for the cancer, he would have had a perfect physical.

"He told the doctors, 'I guess if you hadn't told me about the cancer, I'd be pretty happy,' " Reedy said.

Cope, who was the Bears' defensive coordinator from 1993 until last year, has been scheduled for a series of radiation treatments at St. Francis Hospital and Medical Center in Topeka.

He was then scheduled to undergo further tests Oct. 22 at the Anderson Clinic in Houston.

Still, the disease has not deterred Cope from his duties, Reedy said.

"It's something really amazing," Reedy said. "He was talking to one of the other coaches Tuesday night, and after he got off the phone, he was getting ready to go back to the office to look at tapes and films for Saturday's game."

Co-defensive coordinator Mike Stoops will most likely take over Cope's duties if he should miss a game.

On Cat Chat Thursday night, Coach Bill Snyder said Cope's illness is a tragedy.

"Bob is a very popular individual," he said. "This is a real tragedy and quite a shame, but Bobby's a fighter. He's going to fight this thing tooth and nail. His family will. We all will. We'll all be there for him."

Cope began his coaching career in 1954 as an assistant at Vanderbilt.

He was then an assistant coach at Pacific, Southern Methodist, Arkansas, Mississippi and Purdue. In 1982 he returned to serve as head coach at Pacific where he compiled a 22-46 record over a six-year period.

In 1989, Cope joined Snyder at K-State as defensive coordinator, a position he held for two years before leaving to become an assistant at USC.

In 1993, Cope moved to Baylor and returned to K-State after last season when Bobby Stoops and Jim Leavitt left for other coaching positions.

Sooner, not later, Cats want Sooners

■ Coach Jim Moore has not defeated OU in 10 tries at K-State.

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

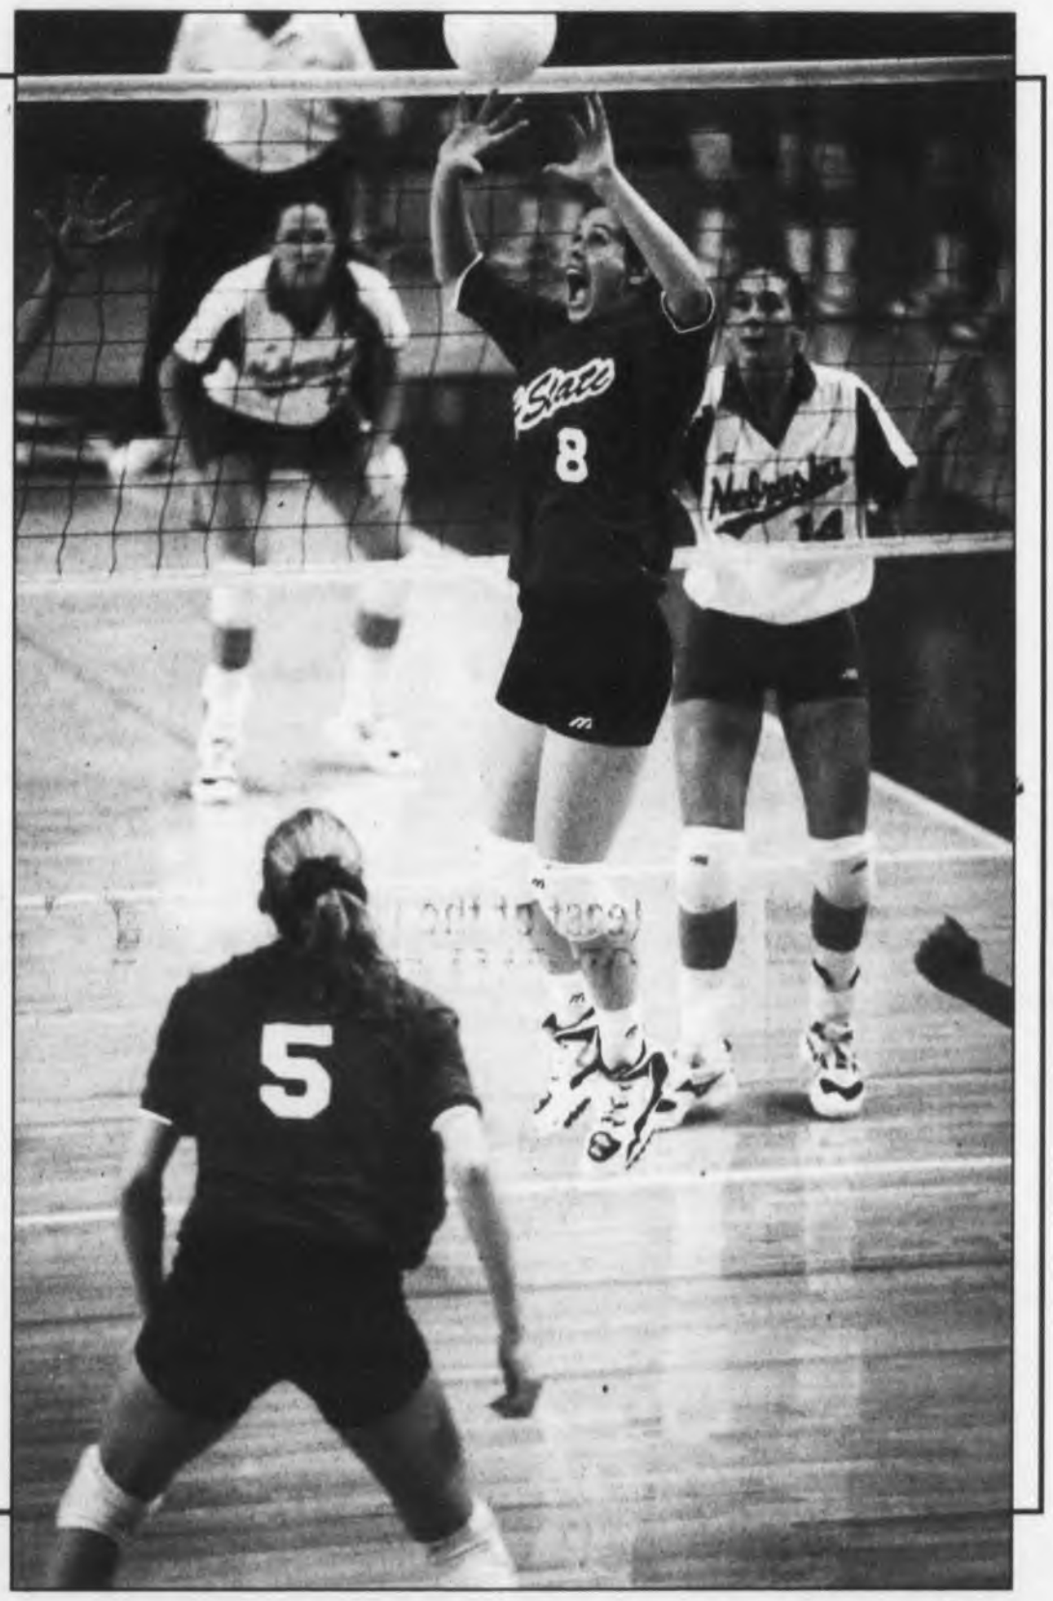
The K-State volleyball team will try to pick up another home win at 7 tonight in what the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics hopes is another packed house at Ahearn Field House.

With Oklahoma set to visit, the Wildcats are fresh off a win against Kansas in straight sets. With Wednesday's win, the Cats improved to 14-2, doing so in front of 4,327 fans, a record crowd.

"It was important that we win the game," senior play-set hitter Toie Young said about the KU match. "We needed to get ourselves back on track. We needed to show ourselves we could play."

The win followed a tough loss at Nebraska, where the Cats took the Huskers to five games.

Oklahoma comes into the match sitting at 9-4 and 0-2 in conference play. The Sooners have dropped two straight with losses to Texas A&M and Texas. However, the Sooners took the No. 8 Longhorns to five games last weekend.



Before the two losses, the Sooners were riding high on a nine-game winning streak. K-State volleyball coach Jim Moore said the key to Oklahoma's success is coming from its outside hitters.

> "They have two of the best outside hitters in the conference and maybe even the country.

"They're a really good volleyball team," Moore said. "They have two of the best outside hitters in the conference and maybe even the country."

K-State will try to break a string in which it has lost 10 straight games to Oklahoma, a feat Moore said he would like to have happen.

"I haven't beat Oklahoma since I've come here," Moore said. "It will be an important game for us, and we will have to play well to beat them."

Defense key to defeating Nebraska

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

It will be a tale of two defenses as K-State and Nebraska line up against each other Saturday at KSU Stadium.

K-State has held its opponents to an average of 239.5 yards per game, while the Huskers have allowed their opponents to gain 325.3 yards per game.

How the Wildcats' defense holds up against Nebraska quarterback Scott Frost and the rest of the Huskers offense will be the difference in the game.

"They stretch you across the field," Snyder said.

"They get in there pretty tight and take all those 380-pound linemen and run them straight at you and knock holes in your defense. Then they run those backs through there."

The option is Nebraska's signature, but Snyder said with a talented running-back trio, the Huskers pose a double threat.

"As soon as you get lulled to sleep trying to play the option from sideline to sideline and not let them throw the play-action passes, they hand the ball to their fullback, and you can take your pick which one that happens to be, and he can get out the gate," Snyder said.

"They've just got enough weapons to pretty much cover the waterfront."

And it's those weapons Snyder said K-State's defense will have to stop.

But on the same note, K-State has its own weapons.

Wildcat quarterback Brian Kavanagh said he knows what to expect from Nebraska's defense, led by defensive ends Grant Wistrom and Jared Tomich.

"I expect to see a whole lot of Wistrom and Tomich," Kavanagh said. "Those are two great players. You can't ask your tackles to stop them all game. You just hope to contain them the best you can."

And he should know.

Last year in Lincoln, Neb., Nebraska knocked starting quarterback Matt Miller out of the game with a concussion. Before he left, he was sacked seven times.

Kavanagh, a quarterback with less of a proficiency to scramble than Miller, relieved Miller in the fourth quarter.

Against Nebraska, Kavanagh led the Wildcats on two scoring drives, completing 12 of 22 passes for 136 yards.

Kavanagh said he remembers the game well.

"I hurt like heck, and I only played one quarter," he said.

Be proud: Big brother is watching

■ K-State linebacker Travis Ochs is quickly making people forget about older brother Dirk.

SHANA NEWELL

Ochs

When preparing for the Cincinnati game, football players were required to review films of last year's 23-21 victory.

The purpose? To prepare for the onslaught of Cincinnati's attack.

But linebacker Travis Ochs found himself studying something else, something more personal. He found himself following the action of his brother and former teammate, Dirk Ochs.

"I probably shouldn't have been, but I was watching him pretty much the whole time," Travis Ochs said.

Old game tapes are the only opportunity Travis Ochs has to see his brother in action anymore. Dirk Ochs finished his eligibility last season. But the memory of playing together on the same field lives on in Travis Ochs' memory.

"I miss having him there," he said. "It's different. It's something I'll never forget."

But Dirk Ochs is never far away, even if he's not on the field. Encouragement and support flow from older brother to younger brother.

"He usually comes by the night before a game, and we sit and talk about it," Travis Ochs said. "He gives me a little encouragement, and he's always at the game. I like knowing he's there, watching me."

Cats to begin conference play

SHANE MCCORMICK

The K-State women's golf team will begin its Big 12 season this weekend at the Big 12 Preview in College Station, Texas.

The team will enter the tournament on a high note after capturing the team title in its last meet at the Northern Iowa Invitational.

At Iowa, freshman Carrie Chambers won the individual title to lead the Cats.

Chambers will be joined in College Station by junior Danielle Hernandez, junior Ann Slater, sophomore Jennifer Omohundro and sophomore Jane Yi.

Stiff competition will confront the Cats this weekend at the Big 12 Preview. Texas, Oklahoma State and Texas A&M are all ranked among the top 25 teams in the nation. Texas Tech, Nebraska and Missouri all got votes as well.

"This is going to be a tough tournament. There are a lot of good teams in this field," Coach Kristi Knight said. "Basically, you're looking at six teams that are all ranked in the top 30 to 35 in the nation."

The team had this last week off from competition to prepare for the Big 12

2 teams' tales: suffocating the Cowboys, selling off the Steelers

The two defending division champs from last season's Super Bowl blew it on their season openers, something that has only happened three times in history.

Now a quarter of the way through the season, the Dallas Cowboys and the Pittsburgh Steelers are clamoring for a foothold in a suddenly very competitive league.

Don't blame it on Barry.

MY

Marvin
BELLAMY

To all you fair-weather Cowboys' fans, now's a good time to start jumping off the bandwagon and thumbing for rides to Miami. Dallas sits at the bottom of its division with the same record as the Giants, its only beaten opponent.

But don't blame it all on Coach Barry Switzer. Someone else is the biggest factor leading to the demise of America's team — the Cowboys' owner.

Owner Jerry Jones and ex-Cowboys coach Jimmy Johnson parted ways because Johnson wanted more control of his team and less meddling from Jones. When it came time to pick a replacement, naturally he selected a head coach with a more laid-back attitude and a Southern accent acceptable to Texans.

Now, Jerry's indirectly dictating Switzer's coaching tactics by doling out big-dollar contracts. The Cowboys are so burdened paying for a few select players they can't afford depth — a necessity in a contact sport such as football where injuries are so prevalent.

In a twisted way, there is logic to Jerry's madness. He's gambling that the NFL's next TV contract negotiation will lead to a multi-million-dollar jump in the salary cap, as it did when the Fox network bought out ABC's rights two years ago. If this doesn't come through, the escalating costs of his big-money contracts will kill him.

Jones' overbearing presence has taken its toll. Dallas now has an unmatched disparity between the pay of its superstars and their supporting cast.

The Cowboys have become a paper tiger with prime-time surface talent but a rotting base. Lack of free money under the cap and losses to free agency will inevitably send Dallas back to the doldrums of its 1980s teams.

And with up-and-coming division rivals Philadelphia and Washington, the future is that much bleaker.

Spot-welding in the Steel City

The Steelers have always been able to adapt. After last season's controversial release of pro-bowl running back Barry Foster and pro-bowl tight end Eric Green, no one thought Pittsburgh would make it to the playoffs.

This season, Kevin Greene, Neil O'Donnell and a host of others were the ones to leave town. If you haven't been watching East Coast games, O'Donnell is now a $25-million tackling dummy for defensive lines the Jets go up against.

In their opening game of the season, only 11 of the Steelers' 22 Super Bowl starters suited up with the team. Then Greg Lloyd twisted his knee in a season-ending injury.

But resourcefulness, depth and team cohesion are saving the Steelers' butts.

What the Cowboys paid for Deion Sanders the Steelers used to pay for Kordell "Slash" Stewart, Rod Woodson (a pro-bowl corner with two interceptions and a touchdown return), Levon Kirkland (three interceptions this season), Charles Johnson, Jerome Bettis (second leading rusher in the AFC) and Errie Pegram.

No matter how many positions Neon Deion plays, the figures don't even compare.

The first real test for the Steelers will be in against Kansas City Monday night, and I think they'll pass.

Two Mondays ago, the Steelers spanked the Bills, a team many picked to be Super Bowl contenders, for reasons beyond me.

Against the Bills' excellent pass rush, linebacker and 1995 defensive Player of the Year Bryce Paup and pro-bowl defensive end Bruce Smith helped the Steelers hold the Bills to zero interceptions and no sacks.

If a great linebacker/defensive end combo sounds familiar, you might note that Kansas City almost parallels the Bills' defense with Derrick Thomas and Neil Smith.

Kansas City also doesn't stop the run particularly well. Denver's league-leading rushing attack racked up 161 yards against the Chiefs at six yards a pop.

The Steelers rushing game is second only to Denver. With a key win against Kansas City and another late-season win against Miami, the Steelers' can very likely build the momentum to also win their conference and another shot at the Super Bowl.

Comedy starts season at Center for the Arts

Jess Louk
staff reporter

Spend an evening with a decapitated corpse, a psychotic young man and a twist of humor.

It's opening night for the Manhattan Center for the Arts' Theater Co.'s latest play, "Night Must Fall."

The play is set in a cottage in the small village of Essex, England, in the late 1930s. It is a classic suspense story written by Emlyn Williams, a Welsh person who also directed and starred in the original production.

> "The contrast of the ordinary with the gruesomeness is what makes this play very effective."
> • BEVERLY FAW, DIRECTOR

A psychotic young man comes to the quiet English household carrying a strangely heavy hat box. Shortly afterward, a murder is discovered nearby. As the play unfolds, the victim's body is discovered with a severed head.

"There is really a lot of humor in it," dramatic director Beverly Faw said. "Unlike some suspense or murder mysteries, the more tense scenes are balanced with a light-heartedness. The contrast of the ordinary with the gruesomeness is what makes this play very effective."

The Theater Co. is run completely by volunteers. The eight cast members gave 66 hours of their time for rehearsal. That doesn't include the process of learning lines or stage production, Faw said.

Two cast members happen to be mother and daughter. Eryn Scroggin is Colleen Scroggin's daughter.

Eryn Scroggin asked her mother if she could read for a part.

Due to a shortage of people reading that night, Colleen Scroggin was asked to fill in so the readings could continue.

Before she knew it, she was asked to play the part of Mrs. Terence, the housekeeper.

"It was a surprise to me. I hadn't went with the purpose in mind to actually try out," Colleen Scroggin said.

Tickets must be purchased in advanced at the Center for the Arts' Theater. Adults pay $8, and students pay $7. The play will run at 8 p.m., today, Saturday, and Oct. 11-12. The play will also run at 2 p.m. Sunday and Oct. 13.

Poet talks about experiences with literature

Lillian Beebe
staff reporter

Some people are born poets. Others are born something else and become poets.

Mark Jarman was born a poet.

He proved it to a crowd of 50 Thursday at the K-State Student Union.

He's not the kind of poet to admit he is a poet by birth.

"I found myself when I was 14 writing all kinds of things," Jarman said.

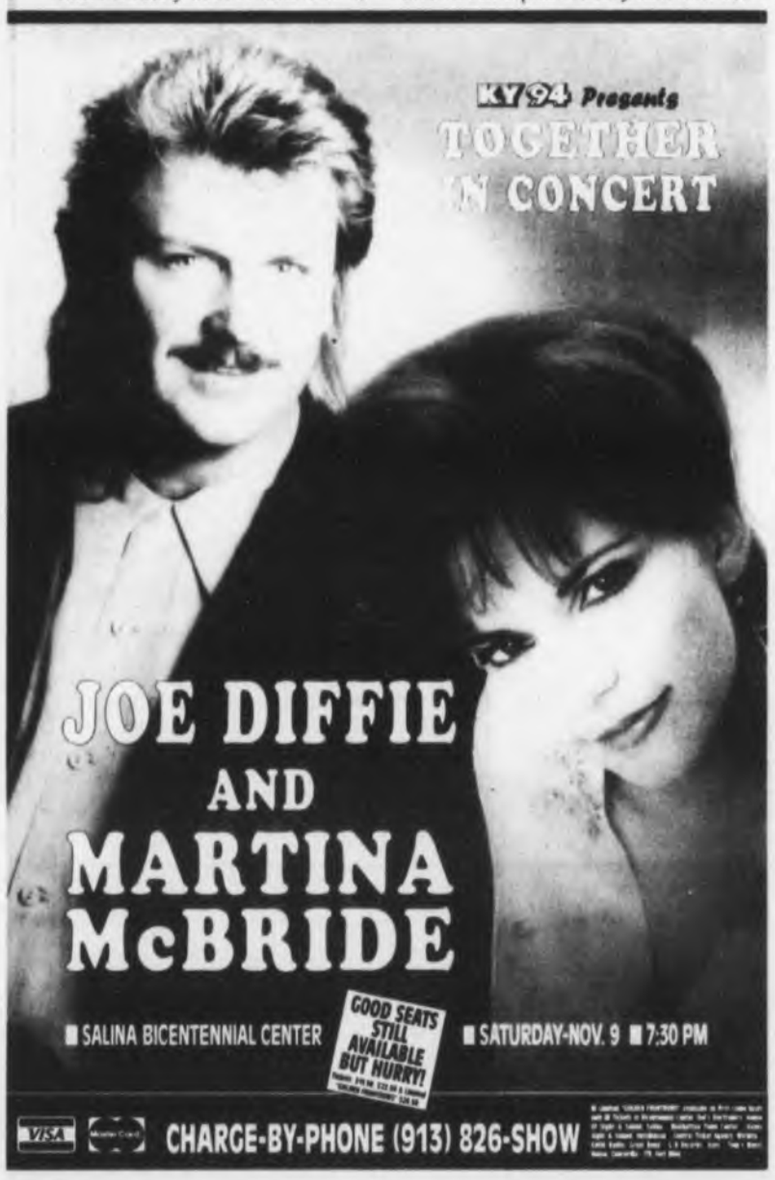
He hasn't stopped writing since. He has published six books of his poetry.

The threads that are woven together to create his poems range from religious and spiritual questions and insights, to memories of home and coming to grips with where you are from.

"Transfiguration" combines two aspects of Christ's life, the transfiguration and the miracles, into one poem. The verses switch from one event to the other.

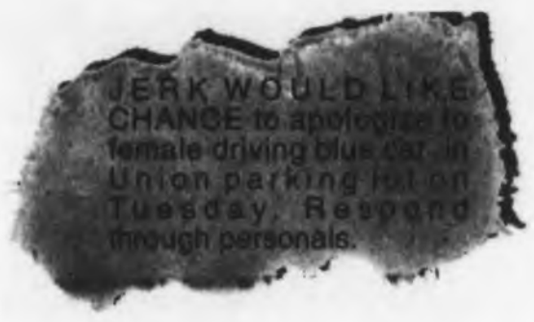
He examines the miracles and the transfiguration with the eye of someone who is trying to see the human side of Christ.

"I liked how he intertwined his spiritual and religious ideals into the poetry," Jennifer Buchanan, sophomore in English and history, said.

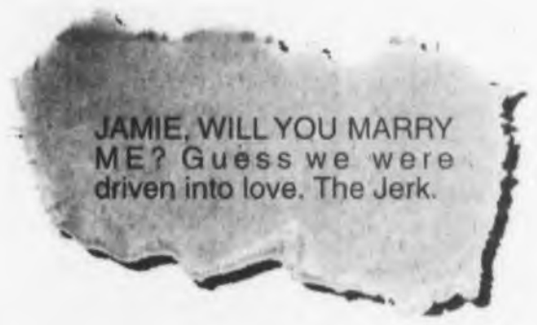


"Ground Swell" tells the story of a young man turning 16 years old on the waves of life and on the waves off the coast of California.

"It's a summer when things begin to happen," Jarman said.



The poem is filled with vivid images such as bleeding and bruised knees that have surfed all day and stick to the uniform pants of their owner as he serves popcorn at a theater by night.



An older boy notices the 16-year-old, giving him a sense of accomplishment. The older boy comes home in a bag from Vietnam at the end of the poem. The funeral is performed by the 16-year-old's father.

"Jarman has a very relevant voice. His subject matter and tone are widely to be admired. He says what he means from the gut. Not enough poets do that," Ben Cartwright, sophomore in English, said.

"I can't believe that jerk cut me off in the parking lot."

tions would be able to get funding for the same projects from more than one source.

For example, council groups, such as the Agricultural Economics Club, get their funding from college councils, which in turn are funded by Senate.

Avila said these groups might also be able to get money from the Senate.

However, Bret Glendening, allocations chairman, said the funding regulations prevented these council groups from coming to Senate for funding.

This amendment to the amendment failed, but Senate passed the original amendment.

"A supply is supposed to be used to effectively communicate to the campus," Glendening said.

"We can't tell a group that you can't buy supplies unless Student Senate says you can."

Senate also voted to pass a resolution to commend Wefald on his service and accomplishments — but not before an amendment was proposed.

Lach Franquemont, arts and sciences senator, proposed a passage be added to say all the senators who supported the resolution should be given buttons with a depiction of student senators kissing Wefald's rear end.

"I thought the bill was a bit of a brown-nosing attempt, and I didn't really care for it," Franquemont said.

Franquemont's amendment failed, but it disturbed other senators.

"I would encourage all of you to be a bit more sensitive to people's feelings," Bill Muir, faculty representative, said.

The Senate's business also included appointing Patrick Carney as the parliamentarian and first readings on a resolution to make organizations that receive privilege fees justify them to the Senate.

In addition, the Senate heard the first readings of 14 bills that would allocate funds to campus groups such as Young Democrats and KSU Aikido Club.

Men charged in cocaine case

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Three of the four men arrested in Manhattan following an eight-month drug investigation have been charged.

Travis Brown was charged with the sale of cocaine within 1,000 feet of a school.

The potential sentence for Brown could be 46-83 months if he is convicted, depending upon his background.

Nathan Brown and James Calvin were charged with possession of cocaine with intent to sell, no tax stamp on the drugs and a misdemeanor for possession of marijuana.

A conviction for possession with intent to sell carries a 14- to 51-month sentence, depending upon their history and other variables.

Brenda Jordan, assistant Riley County attorney, said the three are scheduled to appear in district court Monday.

Preview. But there will be little rest for the Cats coming up. The team will play in tournaments for three consecutive weeks, a schedule Knight said concerns her.

"I'm really leery about the next three weeks," Knight said. "I don't like playing three weeks in a row.

"It is tough on the players physically and academically. Not only are they tired but they are forced to make a lot of school work up."

Knight said although she wants the best out of her team, she knows she has to be realistic about her team's chances this weekend.

"I want to set a challenge for them, but you have to be realistic," Knight said. "I think it would be a big step for the team if we could finish in the top eight or nine at this tournament."

to find a set of values to hold them all together.

The country has got to pull together, even with the members people do not like. There must be a conversation. America needs to have its own knock-down-drag-out conversation, she said.

"There are some issues we never addressed. If you really bare your soul and survive, you can feel connected," she said.

Our whole sense of who we are is changing, Pratt-Kelly said.

If you ask most people what a real American looks like, they would probably haul out a Norman Rockwell painting or a picture of Jimmy Stewart.

But a recent rendition, a magazine cover, depicted the average American as a person of color and a woman.

"I don't know anything that looks less like Jimmy Stewart," she said. "You go to bed thinking you look like this, and in the morning, you find out you look like that."

Pratt-Kelly said Americans have to get back to the notion of the power of one. People think they have no personal power. They think politicians have all the power.

"Politicians are talking about values Madison Avenue promotes: what you can drive, what you can wear. It is the label in your clothes," she said. "They have reduced the American dream to the freedom to acquire."

Pratt-Kelly talked about the need to re-energize the American dream before the United States enters a new era.

"We are the only place in the whole world who have a little piece of the whole planet in one place," she said.

Movie brings together actresses from the '70s

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

"The First Wives Club" might be better titled "Women of the 1970s."

The movie's premise seems less a statement on the condition of marriage and more an easy reason to bring together Goldie Hawn ("Private Benjamin"), Bette Midler ("Outrageous Fortune"), and Diane Keaton ("Annie Hall") — all women who came to prominence in extremely diverse ways during the '70s.

In this funny comedy, however, the casting genius behind bringing together these three terribly different women to create a sort of catty, wacky chemistry is about all one needs to be satisfied.

It's a WASPy version of "Waiting to Exhale."

We are first introduced to their mutual friend, a conventionally hopeless drunk Stockard Channing, whose millionaire husband has dropped her for a younger woman.

She leaps to her death from a Manhattan penthouse.

Her death brings the three women, all college chums, back together.

When the three women discover all of them have been recently divorced or separated from their first husbands, during dinner they set the wheels in motion for a club they eventually form to get revenge, hence the title. Men beware.

Hawn is an aging movie star desperately seeking younger parts.

Keaton is a neurotic, emotionally withdrawn woman hoping her husband comes back.

And Midler is a working-mom type who, though she is still in love with her husband, envies his newly acquired wealth.

Among the second wives, Elizabeth Berkley makes her return to movies after her dud, "Showgirls." Luckily, she plays a bad actress in this movie, too.

"First Wives" would actually be a little sad — it does get a little superficially teary —eyed at times — if it weren't for the fact it's a cartoon.

The flashy filmmaking, glitzy sets and costumes, a hilarious Ivana Trump, and Bronson Pinchot in his "Beverly Hills Cop II" decorator mode don't let this comedy settle down for a minute.

On another level of comedy, the movie evokes the comedies of the 1980s, which evoked the comedies of the 1930s, in the way everything is tied up into a nice, little bundle by the end.

Whether this was intentional or just bad writing depends on how much fun you're having.

Perhaps the movie owes its theme of vengeful and catty women to the classic movie "The Women," a Hollywood bitch-fest starring none other than Joan Crawford, June Allyson and a helpless Leslie Nielsen. It's now being remade with Meg Ryan.

As a man, I was laughing noticeably less than most of the women in the audience. But I suppose that's the point.

I finally understand how women must have felt while watching Rodney Dangerfield's "Easy Money."

engaging proposals

Making proposals thoughtful, personal is key to excitement

story by Kelly Kiefer

The traditional wedding and usual engagement proposal has been challenged time and again.

Stories are often told about crazy things that happen at weddings or neat ways people have proposed. Ideas to jazz things up a bit might not be as difficult to come by as some think.

It is difficult to judge what is unusual for something such as a proposal, because that is what it is all about. Creativity can make the ordinary situation something out of this world.

Unusually romantic is one of the most popular forms of an out-of-the-ordinary engagement proposal.

Many might envy the creativity or courage some people show when they propose, but making it personal and thoughtful is the key.

Jill Randall, senior in accounting, said her sister, Julie, had a dream come true on her day of engagement.

Julie had a childhood obsession with fire engines that really never went away. Her boyfriend, Tim, knew about it because she told him stories about her desire to ride a fire truck. Tim, a K-State graduate, planned a proposal no one would forget.

Jill went to lunch with Tim to get the scoop on his idea and work out the surprise.

Tim had Julie's family and his family hide out at his house while he took Julie to his grandmother's house. Claiming he had a phone call and needed to go help someone with something, he took off.

Shortly after, Julie heard the roar of a siren and ran to the door to see a fire truck pull into the drive.

When she ran out, Tim was fully dressed in fire-fighting gear, bearing a dozen roses. He proposed and took Julie for a ride on the engine.

"She was almost more excited to ride on the fire truck than she was about getting engaged," Jill said.

The day was topped when they returned to Tim's house and their families were there waiting to celebrate.

The romantic truly shines in some. However, the unusual proposal might lead to the unexpected.

Linda Houser, receipts cashier at the K-State Student Union, said her proposal and marriage were both out of the ordinary.

"We were CB enthusiasts back about 20 years ago," she said.

She was at a base radio, and he was out on a radio somewhere when he asked her on the air to marry him.

"I didn't know him very well, so I just sat there. Everyone heard us and knew who we were," Houser said.

When they spoke again, her proposer told her if she did not say yes, he would get on the radio and tell everyone she was terrible. She was convinced by his strange threat and agreed. He immediately got on the air to tell how great she was and that she said yes.

They got married a few months later, again unusually. Without proper wedding attire, they decided to do some borrowing.

"I borrowed a platinum-blond wig and a long, pink caftan," Houser said.

Her husband borrowed a leisure suit from a friend.

They needed rings.

A mutual acquaintance gave her husband a wedding band that he no longer needed, and she used a ring set from a previous marriage. Just about the only cost for the couple was a $15 charge from the minister.

"We've been married for 20 years now, so I guess it's OK to do things like that," Houser said.

Unusual attire is the specialty of some weddings. Pam Miller at Marie's Bridal Formal Wear and Tuxedo, which is also the home of Marie's Costumes, said people often choose a theme for their wedding to dress in.

Her favorite example was one in which a couple got married on Independence Day. The groom dressed as Uncle Sam, and the bride wore a Martha Washington-style dress.

Some other popular themes are New Year's Eve and Halloween, Miller said. Couples might ask people attending a reception to come dressed in costume. Miller said they also have Renaissance wedding rentals.

The variety of dress for wedding ceremonies could not help being noticed at the Riley County courthouse.

Courthouse staff said people come dressed in anything from street clothes to full-blown wedding gowns for a marriage at the courthouse.

What is ordinary or traditional for some isn't necessarily that for others. People choose to make weddings as casual or formal or as interesting as they like.

The creative or out-of-the-ordinary proposal might be the best way to get a yes out of someone. Dinner and violins, picnics in the park, flashing lights, screaming sirens or a trip to Disney World might be the key to the perfect proposal. Ask friends and relatives for ideas, think about other stories you hear, but the answer might already be in your head and in your heart.

After playing on the same field with Dirk Ochs last year, Travis Ochs said there are a lot of things that are different, including the need to become a leader.

With Dirk Ochs' graduation, and the graduation of four other defensive starters, all but one from the front seven, K-State's defense has been learning to walk all over again.

Travis Ochs is quickly learning how to help the group stand and conquer. But he said it isn't easy being thrown into a leadership role.

"I've tried to get better and better and take pride in what I'm doing," he said.

"I know I'm not the best athlete out there and that I don't have the most talent, but I know I can control the defense."

But while Travis Ochs doesn't think he's as talented as most, Dirk Ochs said he would disagree.

"He's got far more ability than even I think he knows," Dirk Ochs said. "He's an incredible athlete."

And big brother is confident little brother will become a strong leader on the defensive squad. After all, Dirk Ochs had to do it once upon a time, too.

"I don't consider myself someone who is a leader. I'm real quiet and soft-spoken," he said. "But I had to become a leader. That's something Travis is having to do now. It's something you have to grow into."

But perhaps the biggest difference, Travis Ochs said, is something he can only see before he suits up.

"There's no 'T' on the back of my jersey anymore," he said. "I'm the only Ochs out there. That's kind of weird."

Once in a Lifetime

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life. You want to share your news with family and friends. The Kansas State Collegian will help you share that news with your K-State family.

For only $12 for an engagement or $15 for a wedding, you can put your announcement in the Collegian's "Once in a Lifetime" special section. For an additional $5, you can also add your picture to your announcement.

"Once in a Lifetime" will run the first Friday of each month, beginning in September. It will run on the following Fridays: Oct. 4, Nov. 1, and Dec. 6. It will resume in February and will run the following Fridays in the spring semester: Feb. 7, March 7, April 4 and May 2. During the summer, the special section will run Thursday, June 5 and Thursday, July 3.

To publish your announcement, please complete the attached form and mail it or take it, with your check, to Student Publications Inc., 103 Kedzie (east of the K-State Union).

The deadline for getting your announcement in the paper will be the Friday preceding the publication date.

Light repairs to make A-12 safer at night

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

Residents of Ford and West halls will be walking in the dark for a while. Lights in lot A-12 are not working.

There are four lights that illuminate the parking lot between Ford and West halls. Three of the four are out of service.

"We knew they were having problems but didn't know they were actually out," said Lance Lunsway, operations manager at Parking Services.

The lights are old, and parts are no longer available to fix them, Lunsway said.

Wamego Electric Company has been contracted to replace the lights. Construction is to begin Tuesday or Wednesday.

Students who use lot A-12 will need to be extra cautious at night while the new lights are being replaced.

"I would recommend they call one of the escort services," said Lt. Dave Johnson of the K-State Police. The campus police also plan to have an extra patrol in the area while the lights are being worked on.

The area will be dark for about three weeks. If problems arise that will cause the construction to be delayed, temporary lights will be put up in the area, said Jack Carlson, engineering technician of the Department of Facilities Planning.

Wamego Electric Company will leave the remaining working light alone as long as possible to provide some light.

There will be areas of the parking lot blocked off during construction, said Jim Johnson, general contractor for Wamego Electric Company.

Students are asked not to park in the three or four parking spaces surrounding the light poles in A-12 so the electrical workers can barricade the spots and get trucks in. Flyers will be posted on cars in the lot as well as in the residence halls to inform students of what is going on.

"Once we get our poles in, we can open again," Johnson said.

There will be two separate periods of barricading: first, while the old poles are pulled and new concrete is poured, and second, when the new poles come in and are installed. Students will be kept informed of the parking situation.

Senator believes positive attitude leads to success

ALLISON WOODALL
staff reporter

Grabbing the pop bottle behind him, a Wichita senator challenged K-State Hispanic students to not make excuses.

"When you look at this Coke bottle, what do you see?" State Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita, said. "You have to begin to see it as medio lleno, half full versus half empty."

Feleciano was responding to a student comment that the same small group of students always comes to events sponsored by the Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

About 30 students gathered in the K-State Student Union last Friday to listen to the first speaker in a series of events for Hispanic Heritage Month.

Feleciano said it is all about attitude.

"It doesn't bother me not to have 300 people here," he said. "And it shouldn't bother you, either. Reaching just one person can sometimes be enough."

Feleciano credited his mother for teaching him the two things he said Hispanics should always remember.

Hispanics should never forget where they came from, he said. And once they succeed, they should use every chance they have to reach back and help others.

Immigrants today must help each other, he said.

"There are people out there who think we live in such a perfect society, we need only one language — English," he said, "and that we don't need bilingual education or ballots in Spanish. It's simply wrong."

Policy makers such as himself must sit down and figure out how to break the mold, Feleciano said. He cited the African American population as an example to follow.

"They understood real quickly the power of a united voice," he said. "The problem is there are damn few Hispanic voices speaking as one. Just think of what we could do."

BRIAN KAVANAGH rests his head on his hand during the fourth quarter of Saturday's game. Kavanagh was replaced by second-string quarterback Jonathan Beasley on the last play of the third quarter. Kavanagh and the Wildcat offense remained under the thumb of Nebraska for much of the game.

FRUSTRATION

STORY BY SHANA NEWELL

For the first time since 1992, K-State was manhandled.

In a 39-3 loss to Nebraska, the Wildcats recorded their lowest offensive output since a 54-7 loss to Colorado in 1992.

Nebraska held the Cats to just 86 yards of offense, 79 of which came on the ground. All of them came in the second half.

The defensive showdown most people expected was what the 43,915 fans at KSU Stadium, the third-largest crowd in school history, saw, at least until late in the second quarter, when the Huskers scored 12 points in the last 4:49 of the half.

"What they did, they did very well," Coach Bill Snyder said. "What we did, we did very poorly."

Nebraska won the coin toss and deferred to the second half. K-State chose to receive and defend the north goal, forcing the Wildcat passing and kicking games to play against the wind — a decision Snyder later said might have been a poor one.

Although the defense held on for most of the game, K-State's offense and the punting game suffered throughout.

On its first possession, K-State was forced to punt without getting a first down, even with the aid of an off-sides penalty against Nebraska on the first snap.

Nebraska capitalized on a 43-yarder by punter James Garcia and an 8-yard return by Octavius McFarlin. With good field position at K-State's 47-yard line, the Huskers were held by K-State's defense to a 45-yard field goal by place-kicker Kris Brown.

On its second possession, K-State again drew Nebraska offsides to give the Cats their first down of the game. But the drive could not be sustained, and Garcia was in to punt again. Under pressure from the Husker special teams, Garcia punted out of bounds for a 29-yarder.

"There was a little bit of wind, but I wouldn't blame my performance on it," Garcia said. "It's my job to get through the ball, and I didn't do a very good job today."

The Huskers went four and out on their next possession to give K-State the ball at the Wildcats' 20-yard line. Three plays later, backup punter Chad Romano was sent in. Romano had kicked well in practice, and Snyder said he deserved the opportunity to kick.

But that opportunity resulted in a miscommunication and another Husker field goal.

HARTFORD, Conn. — President Clinton and Bob Dole clashed vigorously over the role of the federal government, tax cuts, Medicare and the strength of the economy Sunday night in a prime-time debate critical to the Republican challenger's comeback hopes.

Standing just a few feet apart on a red-carpeted stage, Clinton and Dole challenged each other again and again during a 90-minute showdown that ushered in the final month of the White House campaign.

Their fast-paced exchanges were often pointed and ranged from the causes of rising teen drug use to the role of the American military at the dawn of the 21st century.

"I trust the people; the president trusts the government," Dole said in trying to cast the Democratic incumbent as a liberal hiding behind conservative, election-year rhetoric. Dole pointedly recalled the president's 1994 health-care initiative "he wanted to impose on the American people."

Clinton ignored the criticism of that failed proposal but offered a vigorous defense of his record — and of what he said was carefully targeted government activism. As examples, he cited banning certain assault weapons and making it harder for tobacco companies to target

Debate informs students of candidate differences

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

A handful of students turned out to watch the First Presidential Debate on Sunday in the K-State Student Union.

President Clinton and former U.S. Sen. Bob Dole debated for 90 minutes about issues such as tax reform, drug policy, education and foreign policy.

Tom Broderick, freshman in political science, said he thinks the debate was an excellent way for the public to see the differences between the candidates, as well as to educate Americans about the issues.

Although he said he thinks Clinton and Dole have impeccable qualifications, he said he believes both candidates tend to mischaracterize the issues.

"They spend too much time trying to clarify themselves and their beliefs. I think they need to spend more time expressing their own ideas and less time characterizing the other candidate. We need to see a more honest debate," Broderick said.

Broderick also said he believes Clinton is the better candidate because he is more idea-driven and is able to throw out his own creative ideas to the public. Dole is more of a compromiser and respondent, Broderick said, because he has been in politics so long.

Even after seeing obvious differences in the candidates' views, Broderick said he thinks it is interesting to observe Clinton and Dole in

• CHRISTOPHER PRESSES ISRAELIS, PALESTINIANS FOR QUICK RESULTS. Secretary of State Warren Christopher exhorted Israeli and Palestinian leaders to achieve concrete results quickly in crucial peace negotiations opening on the Israel-Gaza border. Christopher's hastily arranged, pep-talking visit underscored Washington's view that despite U.S. steps to invigorate the peace process, it remains tentative and fragile.

• SCIENTIST SAYS VIRUS COULD BE BEHIND GULF WAR ILLNESSES. A California scientist said he has discovered genetic material common to Gulf War-era veterans that could provide a clue as to why so many became sick after serving in the 1991 war. Microbiologist Howard Urnovitz, in a study being presented Monday to a conference of Gulf War veterans in Tampa, Fla., said the genetic marker could point to the existence of a virus. The virus, in turn, could make veterans exposed to chemical agents or other toxins more susceptible to illness, he said.

Ceremony ends week

Students marched down the sidewalk with flags in their hands and songs on their lips. The Racial/Ethnic Harmony Walk on Friday evening was the ending to Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

"We were at the very front of the line, and we started singing a song. It started real quiet and grew real loud. It was cool," said Sarah Morris, sophomore in family studies and human development.

Many different students from all ethnic backgrounds participated this year.

"I think it's a great statement that K-State students can make. We are committed to making this university diverse and growing from that strength. That's what the walk was all about," Student Body President Chris Hansen said.

After the walk around campus, the ceremony continued with a speech from Manhattan mayor Sydney Carlin. Students listened intently as Carlin spoke about diversity in Manhattan.

"We know along with the harmony, there are bound to be differences in people. Like in any family, everything is not wonderful and perfect in Manhattan, Kansas, but we're striving to make it so. As long as we can keep peace and justice and love as our heritage in Manhattan, that's where we'll find our strengths," Carlin said.

The students that presented Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week put together a slide show with music and captured some of the moments of the week. Pat Bosco, dean of student life, also had a few words of inspiration for the students.

"We live in a country. We're studying and working in a country that is probably the world's most multicultural country — multiracial, multiethnic and multireligious," Bosco said.

Bosco continued by saying racism, sexism and and age-ism are germs in the American bloodstream.

"What better place than at K-State do we have an opportunity to really move toward understanding, tolerance and genuine appreciation," Bosco said.

Bosco finished by saying he wants to work hard so K-State doesn't need a Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week.

"I want to work so that every day of the year we practice and are committed to moving toward genuine appreciation so that we can actually say that we are a harmonious society," Bosco said.

Shelter depends on organizations for contributions

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

Manhattan's homeless are invisible.

Junell Norris, executive director of Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., said Manhattan residents are not aware of the homeless problem because people do not see the homeless on the streets.

"The homeless in Manhattan are set. They have tents and sleeping bags or stay with friends and relatives," Norris said.

The shelter, at 831 Leavenworth St., provides housing for 26 individuals with an average stay of six to eight weeks. Norris said that last year the shelter had 265 first-time visitors and 276 returning. She said she anticipates an even busier winter than last year.

Norris said funding for the shelter comes from the United Way, the city, donations and grants. She said that this year she is dependent on donations.

"There has been a decrease in funding from grant revenues at the state level," Norris said. "We truly depend on donations from organizations. We are having to turn to contributions to maintain our services."

One local group that raises money for the shelter is Silver Key Sophomore Honorary. Silver Key will be sponsoring the second annual Homeless Awareness Sleep Out at 7 p.m. Tuesday through 7 a.m. Wednesday on the K-State Student Union front lawn. The city commission proclaimed Tuesday as Homeless Awareness Day.

Liz Neufeld, sophomore in agriculture economics and international studies and Silver Key vice president, said each member of Silver Key is required to get 15 donations. She said they will be asking local businesses and residents for the donations.

"The main thing we want to convey is the sleepout is for the shelter. We do not want to make a farce or misrepresent the homeless population. We just want to raise money and awareness," Neufeld said.

Neufeld said last year the sleepout was very successful.

"I about fell through the floor when they handed me a check for $1,500. Every dollar that Silver Key raises helps with services the community wants," Norris said.

Norris said the money raised last year went to purchase basic necessities and holiday gifts.

Norris said funding isn't the only thing the sleepout has done.

"We have had an increase in participation coming from volunteers and service groups ever since awareness was raised from the sleepout last year," Norris said.

Neufeld said that she has encouraged Silver Key members to visit the shelter before the sleepout.

"Silver Key members have been strongly motivated in knowing what they are raising money for so they can answer questions about the need for the shelter," Norris said.

Mayor Sydney Carlin and Norris will speak at 8 p.m. during the sleepout in the Union free-speech zone.

Donations can be made to Silver Key members or at the sleepout.

IN OUR OPINION

Help Silver Key with our homeless problem

Manhattan has a homeless problem?

Yes, it's true. It might not be as apparent as it is in big cities such as Houston or Los Angeles, where the homeless sleep on the streets and panhandlers are nothing out of the ordinary.

WHY WE CARE

While homelessness is not as apparent of a problem here as in big cities, the homeless still need our help.

But don't be mistaken just because Manhattan's homeless problem is not obvious.

The problem is still there.

One campus group has recognized this problem and decided to try to help.

Silver Key Sophomore Honorary is having its second annual Homeless Awareness Sleep Out Tuesday and Wednesday on the front lawn of the K-State Student Union.

Last year, the group raised $1,500 and donated the money to Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. on Leavenworth Street.

We think Silver Key should be commended for its persistence in doing this two years in a row, and we hope it continues the tradition for this continuing problem.

You can help, too.

The winter months are closing in on us. We have already felt the cold fingers of Old Man Winter nudge us, and it's going to get much worse.

Walking to class when it's below zero and the wind is burning into our ears and freezing our lips can be hell.

But that's a 20-minute walk.

For most of us, all it takes to get warmed up is a flip of the thermostat and a bowl of soup.

But for many it's not that easy. There is no thermostat or bowl of hot soup waiting for them.

Maybe next time you plan on going to Aggieville, you can donate all or part of that $20 to the homeless shelter.

the closet

I'm not coming out. Really.

This Friday is National Coming Out Day. It's the day many gays, lesbians and bisexuals tell their friends, family and co-workers about their sexual orientation.

I'm not coming out. I am content in my ever-shrinking closet.

I have put quite a bit of thought into this decision. I have consulted with friends, various members of my family and complete strangers. I have come to a very important conclusion.

I'm not coming out.

Coming out would be so complicated. People would know about me. Everywhere I went, people would stop and stare, maybe even point.

"Oooh, there goes that bisexual," they would say.

There would be fanatics painting obscenities on my car. There would be Fred Phelps' demonstrators at my children's schools. People would mistake me for Kevyn Jacobs. There would be angry mobs looking to burn me at the stake.

OK, so maybe I'm a tad paranoid.

There might not be any burnings. Good stakes are hard to find this time of year.

In any case, I'm not coming out.

> "My sexuality shouldn't matter. Your sexuality shouldn't matter. Bert and Ernie's sexuality shouldn't matter. Sexual orientation is just another part of who and what we are."

One of my basic problems is with the actual word bisexual. I personally prefer the word queer. Bisexual implies everything is about sex. Bisexual also implies I can do two things at once. The word queer sounds more like I am someone special.

Besides, the word queer is so much more fun to say. Say it out loud. QUEER. See, much more fun.

It's not like my sexuality is a well-guarded secret. My friends know. My daddy knows. My sister knows. My boyfriend knows. I am resisting the comic urge to add my girlfriend knows.

But there is something very different about coming out to the thousands of people who might read the Collegian, not to mention the millions of people worldwide who would have access to information about my sexuality via the Electronic Collegian.

So, I'm not coming out.

My coming out would have an effect on other people. I am very much in love with the most incredible person on the planet. He is intelligent, caring, funny and everything I could have ever wanted from another human being. I'm prepared to be committed to only him for the rest of my life.

He understands my sexuality, but not everyone else would. His friends and co-workers would whisper and point, too. It would not be fair of me to put him through that.

So, I'm not coming out.

My sexuality shouldn't matter. Your sexuality shouldn't matter. Bert and Ernie's sexuality shouldn't matter. Sexual orientation is just a part of who and what we all are.

I am a mother, girlfriend, writer, Playboy subscriber, taxpayer, sister, DB92 listener, daughter, Democrat, Macintosh owner and David Letterman fan, among other things.

But I am so afraid if I came out everyone would see me as just a bisexual and none of those other things. People would read into all of my columns looking for the hidden queer agenda.

The only reason I considered coming out was because the only way to get rid of stereotypes and prejudices is by getting to know one another. Most people who know someone who is lesbian, gay or bisexual support equality based on sexual orientation.

But there is a difference between believing in a cause and telling the world your first love was a 13-year-old girl who lived down the block.

So, I'm not coming out.

As I prepare to go back into my poshly decorated closet, I do have a question I'd like to pose.

If you aren't queer, why should you care about gay rights?

To answer, I use one of my favorite quotes from Rev. Martin Niemoeller, a German Lutheran pastor who spent seven years in a concentration camp.

His quote is titled "I Didn't Speak Up."

"In Germany, the Nazis first came for the communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time there was no one left to speak for me."

First they will come for me, then for you.

Speak up now.

Going in style

MY

Rhett HARTMAN

We have all been there. You are stuck on campus for the next few hours, and you just have to go to the bathroom. You have to use a (gulp) public bathroom.

Never fear! Because of my many years here at K-State, I can help you separate the good restrooms from the bad, and maybe help you understand what makes K-State so great.

First off, I must preface this by saying that I am a guy, and my experience in women's bathrooms is very limited. But I have vicariously learned what some of the women's bathrooms look like.

Let's take a look at the different architectures first. Spanning the years, K-State has added many buildings and renovated others. At the beginning, there was Seaton Hall. Unfortunately, these bathrooms still exist.

Going into the men's bathroom in Seaton is a visual and spatial experience to be sure. In the basement, there is a stall big enough to live in.

On the second floor of Seaton, the stalls have been graced by the presence of many seers and poets. On the walls of these stalls there are ramblings and ranting about many subjects ranging from life and death to fraternities and sororities.

In one of the Seaton bathrooms, I heard there was a chalkboard. But these fantastical furnishings cannot hold a candle to the Durland Hall basement bathroom.

This bathroom is in the midst of the chemical engineering labs, with ceilings that must be 20 feet high. This gothic-like architecture hardly prepares you for a bathroom with bright-green tiles and black toilet seats. A quaint shower adds the final touch to this unique bathroom.

All these restrooms have something in common: They are ancients from a former age, an age that didn't worry about the perfect toilet or asbestos or even looking nice. The rustic attitude (save the asbestos) is a nice change of pace from the current trend of self-flushing toilets and airport-style restrooms. Bring back the pedal flushers!

> "The more we know about our bathrooms, the more aware we will be as a University community. Who would have thought bathrooms were so important?"

But let's take a look at the newer bathrooms that stand out from the rest. The K-State Student Union bathrooms have many characteristics that make them special.

The second-floor women's restroom is supposed to be really interesting. It has, like the first floor men's, doors for both entering and exiting. Within the actual bathroom there is a dividing barrier made of wood and intricately made in a wavy pattern. You don't need this to go to the bathroom, but it is nice to see such splendor every now and again.

The Union first-floor bathroom for men is very much an airport-style bathroom. The toilets are even self-flushing. If you're interested, though, you can just stick your hand in front of the motion-sensor, and the urinal will flush. So basically, they have eliminated the flush-handle and added an idiot mechanism. This is why engineers learn calculus.

The basement of the Union is another story altogether. From a reliable source, I have learned that a few years ago, it was a meeting place for people who needed a quiet place to get together. I won't mull on this subject for long, because it's not a problem now, but we should note there were risks to going to the bathroom.

Next, Holton Hall is a bathroom that combines many characteristics from the old style and the new. Unabashed because of its long layout, the stalls are separated very nicely, and the urinals share a corner where the light from a fogged window lays itself upon the room. Among it all are light-colored earth-tones and well-placed faucets. This bathroom is among the best on campus.

Yet the unique bathroom on the first floor of Nichols Hall cannot escape mention. It has no door. Really, you have to walk around a nice trap-design entryway. It gives the impression of an open-air bathroom, which is refreshing if you enjoy that sort of thing.

Kedzie Hall, Eisenhower Hall and some of the newer Seaton bathrooms all share a special trait — lots of windows. I mean, you can see people walk by while you are sitting down. This is a little uncomfortable at first, but after you get used to it, it becomes part of the scenery. The disturbing part is when you walk by the building and you know which windows have people going to the bathroom behind them.

I am sure I have not hit on all the spectacular bathrooms on campus, so if you know of a bathroom that has escaped my eye, please send a letter to the editor and enlighten us. The more we know about our bathrooms, the more aware we will be as a University community. Who would have thought bathrooms were so important?

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week necessary to commemorate

Editor,

This letter is in response to Kevyn Jacobs' column "United States' diversity no longer a melting pot but a salad bowl."

It is agreed that European Americans have the right to embrace and learn about their cultural heritages. But the fact remains that European Americans, more than people of color, have the opportunity to do just that in our society.

People of color don't usually have this range of selection or option.

Pat McIntosh, the associate director of Wellesley College Center and a European American, gives a test for anyone who is blind to why we need weeks like Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week and African, Native, Latino/Latina and Asian American Heritage months. The test goes as follows:

Can I open the front page of the newspaper or turn on a television and see people of my race widely represented?

When I am told about our national heritage or about civilization, is it usually clear that people of color made it what it is?

If I wish to be, can I be in the company of people of my race at any hour of the day?If you find it difficult to answer these questions honestly, then you can understand McIntosh's premise that "European Americans are not taught to recognize white privilege, therefore making white privilege like a veritable knapsack of special provisions, maps, passports, code books, visas, cloths, tools and blank checks."

Once one comes to understand this dynamic of white privilege and power, it becomes quite clear that white man's burden is a myth. Just ask yourself the following questions:

Who is trailed in malls because they are thought of as natural thieves? Who deals with stricter criminal-justice laws when a crime is committed? Who knows that a prison cell is being nurtured and promoted for their youth?

The answer to these questions will tell you who really has the burden in society. As McIntosh states, "Skin color, because it can't be hidden for protection, is more a determinant of character than religion, gender or sexuality in our society."

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week is designed to create a safe environment for people to address race relations and how those race relations can be improved through effectively learning about each other.

Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week is designed to create a safe environment for people to address race relations and how those race relations can be improved through effectively learning about each other.

We live in a turbulent society for race relations. It is a proven fact that problems only fester and get worse when they are feared and not addressed. We can only heal, recover and live in harmony when we are able to address and deal with the issue of race.

As for you, Jacobs, as you are celebrating your European American heritage and privilege and power, let us not forget that you are the ones who use the N word so casually and callously in your columns. For you, there is a front row, reserved seat at Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week programs because you need to learn about other ethnic groups and what they find hurtful and offensive. Please don't rely on the excuse that the word is used for educational purposes.

If you have any further doubts as to why we need Racial/Ethnic Harmony, Jacobs, then maybe you ought to sit down and reflect on your beliefs and attitude toward people of color.

BRENT BUTLER and Sandy Gibson cheer for the Wildcats on Sunday afternoon at Scoreboard. In preparation for the Nebraska game, Rhett Butler, owner of Scoreboard, said he ordered five to six times the amount of food and alcohol he normally would for a game. As more fans sold their tickets or couldn't find tickets, Butler said he expected crowds to swarm into the sports bar and had increased security for the event.

"The energy in the crowd, as opposed to a typical crowd, is something you can feel," he said. "It's electric and just rubs off on everyone."

The first fans started showing up to the door at 7:30 a.m., and the bar opened at 8 a.m.

Learning center to take college to next level of business education

■ New center to provide business majors with new study, computer and meeting areas.

KELLY FURNAS
staff writer

The attic of Calvin Hall was dedicated Friday afternoon, three months after its transformation into the new Student Learning Center for the College of Business Administration.

The third-floor center, which opened at the beginning of the semester, features study-group rooms, a large meeting and study room, a computer laboratory, a conference room and a student lounge.

"The completion of the Student Learning Center is a major step toward accomplishment of our goal to take K-State's College of Business Administration to the next level of excellence," said Yar Ebadi, dean of the College of Business Administration.

"The creation of this modern learning environment for business education is the result of the generous support of the state of Kansas and our alumni and friends," Ebadi said.

Sara Willer, senior in finance and president of Business Ambassadors, expressed the students' appreciation for the new learning center.

"Students across campus have noticed, and it gives us something to brag about," Willer said. "We feel like we've moved uptown."

During the dedication ceremony, Ebadi thanked the center's architects, designers, engineers and construction workers. He also recognized Koch Industries of Wichita, which made a donation for the Koch Student Lounge and the J.M. Theis Conference Room.

"The partnership between K-State and Koch Industries is an old partnership, and it's one we're extremely proud of," said Lynn Markel, executive vice president of Koch Industries, during the dedication.

Remarks were also made by K-State president Jon Wefald, who called the renovations magnificent.

"Today we're not really just dedicating the Student Learning Center," Wefald said. "We're rededicating all of Calvin Hall."

Wefald also said the changes would help keep the College of Business Administration on the same level with other schools.

"This building puts us in a position to go into the 21st century and compete with other colleges of business," he said.

> "My multimedia classroom is becoming the industry standard for students. These changes will provide a launch pad for students from K-State to the corporate world."

Women discuss U.N. platform issues

CHAD HELIN
staff reporter

The largest gathering of women in the history of the world took place one year ago to establish the Women's Declaration and Platform for Action.

On Sept. 28, some of them got together to make sure their efforts were being utilized, Linda Thurston, professor in special education, said.

Women across the United States met via satellite to discuss this country's efforts in implementing the platform laid out in 1995 by women across the world at the United Nations Fourth Conference on Women in Beijing.

Thurston gave a report of the satellite conference at the first Friday Focus on Women address last week in Union 213.

The satellite conference was sponsored by the President's Interagency Council on Women, a group of high-level representatives from each federal agency working to identify ways of implementing the Beijing document.

Discrimination on the job, violence against women, recycling, child-care, health and education are just some of the issues the United States has addressed, Thurston said.

She attended the Beijing conference as a representative of an international group called Women's Intercultural Network.

The '95 conference was comprised of U.N. delegates and non-governmental organizations. Because Thurston was involved in the non-governmental part of the conference, she had no direct input on the platform that was put together by the U.N.

"The delegates worked with words," Thurston said. "We just worked. We did grassroots stuff and really got into the problems that face the world."

The non-governmental portion of the conference actually took place outside Beijing. Thurston said there was controversy surrounding the separation of the two conferences.

"Those of us at the NGO conference heard that the delegates were scared of radicals that might be attending our conference," she said. "That sounds silly to me."

Thurston said the conference was a wonderful experience that made a big difference in her life. She discovered how similar women from all over the world really are.

"When you get women together talking about their families and education and things, you find we have a lot in common," she said.

Thurston is the top organizer of the Friday Focus on Women lecture series, which is sponsored by the women's studies program. The purpose of the series is to provide opportunities for interaction with other faculty, students and friends concerning relevant issues and ongoing faculty research.

Speeches will be given on the first and third Friday of the month for the rest of the semester. Right now, there are four more lectures scheduled.

Friday Focus on Women lecture series

Oct. 18 – Mary McPhail Gray, associate dean of human ecology, will talk about her experiences in the Harvard Leadership Conference in Union 205.

Nov. 1 – Lori Navarette, assistant professor of special education, will speak about her experiences in multidisciplinary and multicultural work with social causes at Stanford Institute in Union 213.

Nov. 15 – Bob Shoop, professor of educational administration, will talk about sexual harassment in educational settings in Union 213.

Dec. 6 – Women's movement around the world and recent global change will be the topic presented on Dec. 6 by Torry Dickinson, professor of women's studies in Union 205

Nebraska is still Nebraska

battle aftermath

"What they said"

We went out and got whipped today. I didn't think this team could have gotten whipped any more.

• BRIAN KAVANAGH
K-STATE QUARTERBACK

The worst thing about this loss? We lost. We thought we were prepared.

• MARIO SMITH

Huskers silence Cats offense

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

Two weeks ago, Nebraska's football team was left reeling following a 19-0 shutout at the hands of Arizona State. Nebraska players, coaches and fans were left asking what happened.

Saturday, Nebraska forced K-State to try on the shoes the Cornhuskers wore after the loss to the Sun Devils, handing the Wildcats a 39-3 bashing. This time it was Wildcat players, coaches and fans who asked what happened.

And the answer was simple.

"They stopped us again," starting quarterback Brian Kavanagh said.

Although it might be easy to point fingers at Kavanagh and to suggest backup quarterback Jonathan Beasley should have been substituted in earlier than the end of the third quarter, there were many things that went into the Nebraska domination of K-State for the 28th consecutive time.

"We sure helped them today. That's obvious. But they're such a good defensive football team, and they've proved that time and time again," Coach Bill Snyder said.

Kavanagh completed only five of 19 passes and threw two interceptions.

"I think Brian made some decisions he'd like to have back — I would like to have back," Snyder said. "He didn't play well, and he is aware of that."

Kavanagh was sacked three times, the first on the second play of the game, when linebacker Terrell Farley zipped through the K-State offensive line and flattened Kavanagh before he even had a chance to look for a receiver.

In essence, the Huskers figured out K-State's offense.

"Their quarterback had no idea what we were doing," Nebraska defensive back Eric Stokes said. "We had heard all week about how good their defense was, but we wanted to show everyone how good we were, and we wanted to do it in their home state."

With a running game that couldn't move the ball, Kavanagh was forced to throw. Senior wide receiver Kevin Lockett said the time just wasn't there.

"He was getting some pressure," he said. "Sometimes if Brian had another second, we would have been more successful than we were."

But senior center Jason Johnson was quick to point out the fault was not all Kavanagh's.

"Brian, he's our leader on offense. He's always confident, and we've always believed he's going to get the job done. There's not one guy. It's all of us.

"Brian's job is to get us into the best play possible, and from what I could see, that's what he did," Johnson said.

The offensive line was responsible for preventing those sacks. Although it's the largest offensive line in recent Wildcat history, averaging 299 pounds per lineman, it was still dominated by the Husker defense.

"Nebraska has great schemes and great personnel," Johnson said. "We've got to bounce back."

Kavanagh said he agreed.

"They have a great defense, and they showed it today," he said.

Was he prepared for that great defense?

"I was real confident going into this game," he said. "I've never been more prepared for a game in my life. We have to bounce back. There are no gimmes from here on out."

Former teammates showcase individual talents in showdown

Evans

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Anyone who wondered whether Nebraska I-back DeAngelo Evans could play at the Division I level got the answer Saturday at KSU Stadium.

Without a doubt, yes.

But Evans, a true freshman from Wichita Collegiate, never imagined the reception of boos he received from Wildcat fans each time his name was announced.

"I thought they would be a little bit warmer here because of my good career in high school," Evans said.

"But it was motivational for me. It made me run harder."

And run harder he did, for 168 yards on 21 carries and two touchdowns.

"DeAngelo played very well," Nebraska coach Tom Osborne said. "He showed maturity and a lot of durability for a true freshman. We thought if he got into this situation, he would be able to respond the way that he did."

But Evans wasn't the only Wichita Collegiate native that showed some bright spots Saturday.

True freshman place-kicker Jamie Rheem provided the one spark of light for the Wildcat offense.

After Clyde Johnson intercepted an errant Scott Frost pass and a personal-foul penalty against Nebraska, the Cats found themselves at the Huskers' 31.

The Cats couldn't convert for the first down after a three-play drive for minus 2 yards. Rheem came to attempt a 51-yard field goal, a career-long.

"I felt good before the kick," Rheem said. "I wasn't nervous at all. I was just relaxed."

With a slight wind at his back, Rheem connected on the kick to cut the Huskers' lead to 6-3 in the second quarter.

"I just kicked through it like it was an extra point. It felt pretty good off my foot," Rheem said.

Rheem said he wasn't surprised with the performance of his ex-teammate.

"I knew DeAngelo was capable of doing that. I wasn't surprised at all," he said. "I know he is capable of playing at this level. I was a little bit surprised with all of the boos from the crowd."

But there was one fan who wasn't booing for Evans. He was cheering for both Evans and Rheem.

Collegiate coach Mike Gehrer was at the game to watch two of his former players' teams hook up against each other.

But Gehrer said he understands why the fans were booing.

"DeAngelo showed he is a great back. The fans know that they lost out on a great Kansas back," he said.

Gehrer said Evans and Rheem had both talked to each other last week.

"DeAngelo called and talked to Jamie. There was some friendly taunting going on," Gehrer said. "DeAngelo said he was going to return a kick back all the way that Jamie kicked."

But the question is "Who did Gehrer root for?"

"I rooted for them both," Gehrer said.

"It wasn't really hard. It is exhilarating to get to watch your kids play at that level and do great things.

"The expectations for DeAngelo have been high, but I think Jamie has really surprised some people. He's gotten stronger and stepped in to do the job."

Although Rheem might not have felt too well about the loss, Evans said he could soar to new heights.

"I feel like a thousand-pound weight has been lifted off my back," Evans said. "I feel so good. I feel like I could fly back home to Wichita."

Some fans, players recognize NU's dominance, talents

DAVE GUNTHER

The feeling in the stands at KSU Stadium was one of disappointment and frustration following the 39-3 drubbing of K-State at the hands of Nebraska.

Nick Peterson, sophomore in electrical engineering, was one K-State fan who said he was disappointed in the game.

"I just thought Nebraska played a really good game. I mean, they're a good team. Our offense didn't play so good today."

The Huskers led throughout, making for a tense game to watch, for some Wildcat fans. The K-State offense tried to find a way to move the ball downfield, but Nebraska's defense had other plans.

"Guys who are that big and that strong shouldn't be that fast, but they are," K-State quarterback Brian Kavanagh said.

"They are extremely well-coached, fundamentally sound athletes."

Although the Husker defense held K-State to just 86 total yards, some Husker faithful who attended the game didn't think K-State is the type of team that they saw play Saturday.

"It was a pretty good game. I think K-State is a better football team than what they probably showed today. Nebraska has an awesome defense, and I think that showed today. But like I said, I think K-State is more deserving than what the scoreboard shows," Randy Kleve, Aurora, Neb., said.

But then there were those who thought Nebraska dominated.

"Nebraska's offense had a good game," Jacob Ryan, Omaha, Neb., said.

"The offensive line did good. The running backs had a good game today. The defense did pretty good, too."

One K-State player who saw just how good Nebraska's defense played was senior wide receiver Kevin Lockett.

"Their front seven is so powerful it helps their defensive backs out," Lockett said.

"You like to think as the years go by we improve. It seems as the years go on, we get beat worse. They played pretty basic coverages in the secondary. (The front seven) put pressure on the quarterback and forced him to make decisions quick."

Women's squad takes 2nd at OSU Jamboree

■ Baylor's team takes first place as Wildcats improve from last year.

SHANA NEWELL

K-State's women's cross country team hit the road this weekend and took second place Saturday at the Cowboy Jamboree in Stillwater, Okla.

Baylor's squad finished in first place with 55 points. The Wildcats had 90.

"They're a good team," Coach Terry Drake said of the Bears.

So good, in fact, it was virtually all K-State and Baylor runners who saturated the top of the race.

Wildcat Samantha McNamara took eighth overall with a time of 18 minutes, 10 seconds. Cristy Swartz finished ninth with a time of 18:15.

"Both of them ran solid races," Drake said.

"Cristy probably would have run better, but they have a really weird course there, and she started having back spasms. She was winning the race but had to slow it down because of her back."

Another aspect of the race that hurt the Cats was the organizer's stipulation that a team must declare seven runners whose scores will be tallied.

Usually, a team's score is based on the top seven runners who finish. For the Jamboree, Drake had to designate the seven runners whose finish would count before the race began.

"I guessed wrong," Drake said. "I cost us some points."

Drake did not figure Ann Galubski would be one of the top seven runners for the Cats. As it was, she finished fifth among Wildcat runners with a time of 19:23.

"She had a great race," Drake said.

Ashley Kinton surprised Drake by having a solid race, finishing 17th with a time of 18:53.

"She generally is our fourth or fifth girl, and this time she was third, so that was a nice surprise," Drake said.

Also comforting to Drake was the improvement the runners have made on this course.

Last year at the Jamboree, McNamara ran 1:10 slower than she did this year. Swartz ran 1:00 slower.

> "If she had run the time she ran Saturday at Districts last year, Sam would have gone to Nationals."
> • TERRY DRAKE
> CROSS COUNTRY COACH

At the end of the season, at Districts, McNamara set a personal record with a time of 18:35 on the Jamboree's course.

"If she had run the time she ran Saturday at Districts last year, Sam would have gone to Nationals. Those types of things are encouraging," Drake said.

The Wildcats will not compete again until the Wolverine Invitational on Oct. 20. Drake said he expects freshman Kathryn Wolfram to be ready to run in Ann Arbor, Mich. Wolfram had been competing with Swartz and McNamara for the top finishes among Wildcats before a strained hamstring sidelined her earlier this season.

"If she runs, she changes our outcome immensely," Drake said.

Netters down Sooners, aiming for Top 25

TOIE YOUNG, play-set hitter, blocks a shot with the support of Valerie Wieck, middle blocker, in the second game of the match. K-State defeated the Sooners 3-0 and improved its record to 15-2, 3-1 in the Big 12.

Poised on the brink of its first-ever foray into the AVCA top-25 poll, K-State knocked out another big win, defeating Oklahoma 3-0 Friday night at Ahearn Field House.

"This was a very important win for us after the loss to Nebraska," sophomore middle blocker Val Wieck said. "We worked hard all this week on the things we need to do to get to where we want to be in December — the NCAA tournament."

The first game moved faster than an Abbie Brown serve. Although the Sooners scored the first two points, K-State roared back to win 15-5 behind three service aces from junior setter Devon Ryning.

"I think part of it was we were serving really well, and they were not," Coach Jim Moore said. "Kate (DeClerk) and Devon served so well early, Oklahoma didn't have much of a chance to respond."

The Wildcats never trailed in the second game, jumping to a 12-2 lead. Oklahoma would rally, using a 6-1 run to close to 13-8. But a Sooner error and a block by Wieck and Ryning put the game away, 15-8.

The Sooners finally took command in the third game, scoring five straight points early to take a three-point lead. K-State staged several comebacks, but Oklahoma had an answer every time, holding off the Cats to retain the lead.

The Cats finally tied the game at 10-10 on a back-row attack from swing hitter Kim Zschau. The Sooners scored again, but K-State again knotted the score at 11-11 when an Oklahoma attack went wide. K-State went on to win the match on consecutive kills by play-set hitter Toie Young and swing hitter Brown.

"I was really happy with the way we did come back," Moore said. "I still think the biggest part of it was they made too many mistakes to stay in the match with us. But Kim attacked well from the back, and we were blocking well. We did what we needed to win."

Young led the Cats offensively, earning nine kills while hitting .500. Brown and Zschau also had nine kills, and Wieck added seven, hitting .385.

"Every ball Toie hit she terminated," Moore said. "They were either kills or errors. They didn't dig a one. But I thought some of the best things she did on defense when we needed them."

Defensively, Zschau led the Cats with 10 digs, with Brown adding nine. Wieck recorded both of K-State's solo blocks, assisting on three more.

"Yesterday, three of us middle blockers did a drill where we had to block three balls in each position, then two balls in every position," Wieck said. "That's what Jim had us working on was getting in position to take away their attacks."

The win improves the Cats to 15-2, 3-1 in Big 12 play. The netters' next action will be this weekend, when they hit the road to play Baylor and Texas Tech.

▶ OLYMPICS

Olympians honored at Nebraska game

DAN LEWERENZ
sports editor

Homecoming is still more than a month away, but three K-State alumni made their way back to Manhattan on Saturday to be recognized for their Olympic achievements.

Former Wildcat track and field greats Kenny Harrison, Connie Teaberry and Steve Fritz joined K-State senior Ed Broxterman in a ceremony honoring them before the K-State-Nebraska football game.

Former K-State basketball star and Dream Team member Mitch Richmond was the only K-State Olympian unable to attend.

"This is awesome," Teaberry, a high-jumper and 1992 K-State graduate, said. "I haven't been back since I graduated."

The gathering was the first opportunity K-State fans had to interact with Wildcat Olympians and a chance for the K-State track team to shine.

"It means a lot to the program. People realize we have a great program and are showing more support for the track program at K-State," Broxterman said.

"Hopefully, we'll get a new track built, because our facility is not as good as it could be."

The athletes had few opportunities to interact with each other at either the Olympic Trials or the Olympic Games, meaning this was the first opportunity they had to come together.

"It's kind of hard, because that's the last thing on your mind at the Trials," Teaberry said.

"But when you're looking at how many K-State athletes there were, it was great."

Although Richmond won a gold medal with Team USA Basketball, Harrison, who won the gold in the triple jump, was the only medalist in attendance.

Having fought off injuries before the Trials, Harrison leapt 59'1-1/4" into the wind on his first jump, a mark no one would surpass.

"On my first jump I nailed it. It was 59 feet and some change," Harrison said.

"So I took another jump, and I just felt this was going to be my day, and I was going to do special things. It was the weirdest feeling I've ever had."

But the national media remained focused on American Mike Conley and British world-record holder Jonathan Edwards.

"There's only four people who have jumped 59 feet. And Mike Conley said the only reason was because I got a good wind," Harrison said.

"And then at the press conference, they all asked Mike Conley if he thought he could beat Jonathan Edwards. I sat up there for 15 minutes, and not one question was directed toward me. Not one person asked about beating me."

So Harrison did his talking on the field, following his victory at the Trials by jumping 59' 4-1/4" and winning the gold — minutes after girlfriend Gail Devers won her second-consecutive gold in the 100-meters.

"We were just sitting on the beds saying, 'You're the gold medalist,' like little kids," he said. "'You're the gold medalist. No, you're the gold medalist. No, you're the gold medalist.'"

But regardless whether they won gold, all the athletes represented K-State and the people of Kansas.

"It's been pretty inspirational seeing people like Steve Fritz, people who haven't had the greatest facilities and the greatest opportunities, make it at this level," Broxterman said.

"I'm proud, and I know Steve's proud to represent Kansas farmers and Kansas people."

Garcia said a miscommunication on his part had him holding the ball longer than he was supposed to. Before he could kick the ball, linebacker Terrell Farley had Garcia on the ground. Nebraska found itself with first and 10 at K-State's own 14-yard line.

"I just had a brain letdown," Garcia said. "It was my fault."

K-State's defense had another impressive stand at the 8-yard line, forcing Brown to kick his second field goal to give Nebraska a 6-0 lead.

"I thought we played very well defensively in the first half, but offensively, I think we had zero yards," Snyder said. "That shows where we were with that."

K-State's only scoring came courtesy of a field goal from true freshman Jamie Rheem.

A 22-yard return on an interception by strong safety Clyde Johnson and a 15-yard Husker penalty set the Wildcats up for a scoring opportunity at Nebraska's 31-yard line. But two incomplete passes by starting quarterback Brian Kavanagh and a tackle for loss to running back Mike Lawrence forced the Wildcats to settle for a field goal.

With 11:36 remaining in the game, Rheem hit a 51-yard field goal to cut the Husker lead to 6-3.

The running game was nonexistent for the Wildcats throughout the game.

The Wildcats' leading rusher? True freshman backup quarterback Jonathan Beasley led the Wildcats' running game after coming in for mop-up relief late in the third quarter. Beasley rushed for 40 yards on five attempts and was three of nine in pass completions with an interception.

> What they did, they did very well. What we did, we did very poorly.
> • BILL SNYDER
> K-STATE FOOTBALL COACH

Kavanagh finished the game with only five of 19 completions and two interceptions for 34 yards. He was sacked three times for 21 yards in losses.

The loss was the 28th consecutive loss to Nebraska for K-State as the Wildcats fall to 4-1 in the season.

They fell to No. 22 in the Associated Press poll, and tumbled from No. 12 to No. 21 in the USA Today/CNN Coaches poll.

CULTURE to DANCE for

STORY BY BETH HUSTED • PHOTOS BY DARREN WHITLEY

Hispanic heritage unfolds as folkloric dance group kicks off McCain's production season

The month of October has many traditions — jack-o-lanterns, Halloween costumes, trick-or-treaters and, this year, Hispanic Heritage Month.

To help McCain Auditorium kick off its season and to showcase its own group, the Puerto Rico Baila folkloric dance group performed at McCain last Friday night.

The group is presently made up of four couples that have learned the traditional dances of the Puerto Rican countryside.

"It is my third year in the group. This was the first time we have preformed this semester," Rami Aizenman, senior in architecture, said.

Although the group is called Puerto Rico Baila, there is only one member in the group who is originally from Puerto Rico. The group is open to anyone who wants to learn more about the Hispanic culture and its traditional dances.

"After spending so much time in studio, it's like therapy for me. I love to dance," Aizenman said.

The dances are part of Puerto Rican tradition, and the group tries to adhere to those traditions closely, from the costumes to the dance moves.

> "After spending so much time in studio, it's like therapy for me. I love to dance."
> • RAMI AIZENMAN
> SENIOR IN ARCHITECTURE

"It's part of the reason we dance barefoot," Arleen Baiges, director for Puerto Rico Baila, said.

The group sticks as close as it can to the way Puerto Rican countrymen would dance, Baiges said.

Most people expect the costumes to have the traditional Mexican flare, but the group wears very simple costumes that reflect the clothing of the people of the Puerto Rican countryside, she said.

The dance is based on Afroantillan culture. Africans were introduced to Puerto Rico by Spaniards in the Caribbean.

They brought a lot of their dance tradition to the area, Baiges said.

The group helps members to learn more about the culture and, for some students, provides a close connection to home.

"This is a family away from home for me," Baiges said. Baiges followed her sister to K-State, and their parents still live in Puerto Rico.

It's a way for students to learn more about cultural dance and the Hispanic culture in general. "We are exposed to a lot of music and dance. It's in our blood. I guess we're born with it," Baiges said.

Just like traditional Hawaiian dance, each movement in Hispanic dance has a meaning. It tells a story.

The pleña is the chorus — the gossip that tells the story in the dance. "When we sway our skirts, it is to scare away the evil spirit, Vegigante," Baiges said. The movements follow the story that is being told.

Latino dance will also be featured on Oct. 8 in Union Station. The lessons are free. Dances will include salsa, merengue, Cumbias, Norteñas and Tex-Mex.

PERFORMING TO empty seats Puerto Rico Baila practices in Justin 149 with Latin music playing from a small jam box. While all six of the dancers speak Spanish, only one is from Puerto Rico.

ARLEEN BAIGES, senior in industrial engineering, dances to Latin music with Samuel Navarro, junior in mechanical engineering, during the group's first performance of the year at McCain Auditorium.

RAMI AIZENMAN, senior in architecture, secures his hat and checks his costume in the mirror before joining the group for its first performance of the year at McCain Auditorium.

BAIGES CONGRATULATES Brandy Sheehan, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine; Aizenman; and Navarro on a good first performance in the ushers' room as Aizenman folds his costume belt. Much of the costumes were kept by Baiges so they could stay with the group as members change.

Renaissance Festival offers fun and learning

MY

Portia SISCO

It's a live game of dress-up. Men wearing tights and tunics, and ladies wearing ornate gowns and headpieces, dance around maypoles and joust on horseback.

It's the Renaissance Festival.

The Renaissance Festival is located near Bonner Springs.

The festival features period arts and crafts, hair-weaving, period clothing and more.

Visitors can purchase everything from renaissance clothing to real armor and weapons.

More traditional souvenirs such as T-shirts and coffee mugs are also available for the timid.

A lot of the workers are volunteers.

Those who do get paid don't make much, but they put on a good show.

The festival is a unique way of preserving the past and an opportunity to learn.

Volunteers dressed in period costumes pass out pamphlets and add to the character and life of the festival. Everything must be period, from their clothing to their speech and mannerisms.

Anything that is not period is called an anachronism.

Workers and volunteers at the festival attend practices where they learn how to act, speak and dress their parts.

Peasants in tunics line the front gate, creating an atmosphere before visitors enter the gate.

Other characters such as the Mad Kisser and the lady with the all-too-noticeable cleavage are probably not getting paid anything to participate. They are just there for fun.

The booths are rented by crafters and artists.

Most of them travel from festival to festival year-round. It's a way of life for them.

For others, it's a temporary job or an extracurricular activity.

> "Acts such as the Fikklebiches and Mallory and Family return annually, trying to make money and have a good time."

Acts such as the Fikklebiches and Mallory and Family return annually, trying to make money and have a good time.

The Fikklebiches hosted a comedic battle of the sexes with their male beauty contest.

Contestants were picked from the audience.

They dressed up in tutus and colored scarves.

The audience helped select the winner.

Live jousting and real swordfights were in the main arena. Behind the jousting field, the king and queen of the realm, dressed in ornate clothing, watched the knights fight.

These acts are the most popular because they involve a lot of audience participation.

Before the joust, the audience is instructed on cheering etiquette.

Audience members are also assigned a knight to cheer for.

Donations are requested at every act.

For some performers, this is the only income they have.

A re-enactment of Robin Hood and Little John pulled in a crowd of a couple hundred. The group was so large there were not enough seats to accommodate everyone.

The re-enactment depicts the first meeting of Robin Hood and Little John.

It's a very involved play featuring several dunkings in the man-made pond.

With the beautiful fall weather, crowds were especially large last weekend.

However, all of the lines moved quickly, so no one had to wait long.

Storytellers and musicians lined the walkways, performing for smaller crowds.

Food is another attraction of the festival.

Chocolate-covered cheesecake on a stick and turkey legs are just a few specialties the festival offered.

The death parade marched through the park in the afternoon. Audiences were told that if they don't look at death, who stood in black robes at the front of the parade, then the plague would pass over them.

All the performers in the parade dressed in black.

With eerie drum music and dancers who reached out to members of the crowd, the parade was a disturbing experience, even on a sunny day.

The main parade of the day was the king's parade. The king and his entourage marched through the park and back to the main arena.

The festival offers a live example of the way people lived in the renaissance period of history.

Who would ever guess people could learn history by experiencing it?

The festival creates an atmosphere for fun and learning that students shouldn't miss.

Food and souvenirs aren't cheap, but the festival offers special student rates for admission.

Next weekend will be the final weekend of the Renaissance Festival this year.

Don't miss this window to the past.

School officials crack down on crime to avoid lawsuits

■ Recent suspensions prove school policies are being strictly enforced.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Suspended: A 13-year-old honor student in Ohio for having Midol at school. A first-grader in North Carolina for a kiddie smooch.

Two co-eds at a Roman Catholic high school in Florida refused to remove pro-choice stickers from their cars and were suspended, as was an Anderson, S.C., boy who wore a jacket to school with a Confederate battle flag on the back.

Buffeted by lawsuits and lesser criticisms, many school administrators have begun following to the letter school rules on weapons, clothing, drugs and potentially offensive behavior. Many want to ensure their students respect differences among classmates.

"They're going and getting all strict now because there's all this crime," said Robert Evans, a senior at Archbishop Carroll High School in Washington.

Many educators agree with the Washington 17-year-old. They say removing students from school is not the first choice for discipline, but officials have become quick to suspend in response to public anxiety over school safety.

"You may see that we are cracking down more to be sensitive to what the public wants," said Carole Kennedy, principal at New Haven Elementary School in Columbia, Mo., and president of the National Association of Elementary School Principals.

Some educators also fear lawsuits filed by parents alleging their child's right to free speech or expression has been violated, or the school did too little to protect their child's safety, said Gwendolyn Gregory, deputy general counsel of the National School Boards Association.

They read about the jury in San Francisco that awarded $500,000 to a student upon finding that school officials ignored her complaints about a sixth-grade boy's almost daily barrage of vulgarities, lewd insults and threats. The jury ordered the school district to pay 93 percent of the award; the boy's family, $27,000; and the girl's former principal, $6,000.

In response to inquiries, the U.S. Department of Education issued policy guidelines in August for peer sexual harassment. Norma Cantu, the department's assistant secretary for civil rights, said harassment that creates a hostile environment is a federal offense, covered by a law prohibiting sex discrimination in educational programs and activities.

Nadine Strossen, national president of the American Civil Liberties Union, said she thinks educators' fears of being sued are overblown.

Public education is under siege, she said, but treating Midol like marijuana makes the school look ridiculous.

The Midol incident occurred last week in Dayton, Ohio, where the 13-year-old girl was suspended for violating her school's drug policy. She had borrowed a packet of the menstrual-pain pills from a classmate but never took it.

Last month, Johnathan Prevette, a first-grader at a school in Lexington, N.C., was separated from his class and kept from attending an ice-cream party for students with perfect attendance after he kissed a girl on the cheek. School officials called it unwelcome touching.

"I think it's silly. It's going overboard," Sloane Stupica, a mother in Arlington, Va., said. "I think people are trying to be PC — trying to cover all bases."

Her 5-year-old daughter, Malory, agreed. Asked if children should be suspended for kissing, Malory shyly shook her head no. But, asked if she wants a boy to kiss her at school, she said no.

Last year, a high-school student was suspended in Sterling, Va., for using mouthwash at school.

The principal said the youth admitted drinking it and bragged that it contained alcohol.

"I think we are reacting more quickly because we don't want the kids to come back with a sharp knife or something else in the mouthwash bottle," said Kennedy, head of the Elementary Schools Principals' Association.

children.

"We are better off than we were four years ago — let's keep it going," Clinton said, taking credit for 10 million new jobs and making his case for a second term.

Dole disagreed. Under Clinton, he said, "Americans are working harder and paying higher taxes."

Dole recalled Clinton's own admission that in 1993 he "had raised taxes too much." A bit later, Clinton recalled a decade-old quote from Dole's running mate, Jack Kemp, who said Dole "never met a tax he didn't hike."

The Bushnell Theater in downtown Hartford was the site for the first of two 90-minute October debates between Clinton and Dole, both one-on-one encounters because of a controversial decision to exclude Ross Perot.

Trailing by significant margins in most national and key state polls, Dole was running short of time to build support for a Republican campaign anchored on a promise to cut taxes by 15 percent and the theme that Clinton is a "warmed-over liberal."

Clinton held fast to his assertion that the "Dole-Gingrich" 1995 Republican budget would have devastated Medicare. Dole retorted: "Stop scaring the seniors, Mr. President." He said the GOP budget increased spending on Medicare, just not as much as Democrats wanted.

Dole vigorously promoted his $548 billion tax-cut plan, saying it was time to put more money into the pockets of everyday working Americans.

"I want the government to pinch pennies for a change instead of the American families," Dole said.

Clinton called it a "$550 billion tax scheme" that would either make the deficit explode or require unacceptable cuts in Medicare and education.

There was an early light moment on this subject, as Dole told moderator Jim Lehrer he would get the tax cut, and "so will the former president."

Clinton laughed and said, "I need it."

Dole also took aim at Clinton's foreign policy.

"Saddam Hussein is better off than he was four years ago," Dole said of the Iraqi dictator.

"It is fascinating to see how they interact and respond to each other. I think the more you watch, the more you realize how similar the candidates are," he said. "Debates such as these confirm what people already thought about the candidates."

Bruce Coleman, sophomore in agricultural economics, said he does not agree with Clinton's policies.

"I think Clinton only says what the people want to hear," Coleman said. "Dole seems to be a more sincere and down-to-earth individual."

Although a variety of issues was covered in the debate, Shelly Coleman, a 1995 K-State graduate, said he thought Clinton and Dole failed to answer the questions appropriately.

"The mediator asked good questions, but the candidates tried to avoid the controversial topics," she said.

An interest in politics led Juan-Carlos Morales, graduate student in engineering, to watch the debate.

"I like politics, and it is very interesting to see the different views. They did discuss important issues, but I noticed they did not really talk about jobs much," Morales said. "That needs to change."

The candidates, he said, also need to change how they debate.

"The debate was focused on what the other candidate hasn't done. The idea of a debate is to get to know the other point of view and educate people on the issues," Morales said. "I think the whole idea is to solidify the idea of democracy."

Finding a plum of a car deal requires research and shopping around

Ashley Celler
staff reporter

With a little research before buying a used car, it is possible not to end up with a lemon.

"Buying a used car is like dating a new guy. You're getting someone else's problems, but it is the best option for students, because their budgets are limited," Jill Bieker, a freshman in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Scott Teenor, a used-car sales representative at Briggs Central, said it is very possible to find a reliable used car if you thoroughly check out the car before you buy it.

Teenor said before buying the car, you should check the exterior and interior to make sure it is clean and undamaged.

Sometimes cars have been repainted to hide damage that was done to the car in an accident.

"Another useful tip is to contact the previous owners and talk to them about the car and the car's history," Matt Messenger, a graduate student in entomology, said.

"If the car has been in accidents or has had some mechanical problems, the buyer should steer away from it," Messenger said.

It is also important to find a car with low mileage, which on average is under 12,000 miles.

"Older models have more mileage and are more risky. You don't know what can happen. Buyers should look for newer models with low mileage, which is what we sell a lot of, to make sure they get a reliable car," said Tracy Mendels, a used-car sales consultant at Jon Murdock Auto Mall.

Teenor also said he suggested going to a dealer to buy a used car, as opposed to buying one from an individual, because dealers provide warranties.

"Some dealers offer anywhere from 25- to 50-percent warranties, depending on the mileage of the car.

The terms, or amount of time the car is under warranty, will vary, but dealerships might also provide extended service contracts that can last anywhere from 12,000 to 36,000 miles," Teenor said.

These warranties can be useful if something goes wrong with the car after purchasing it, he said.

It is also a good idea to have a mechanic look at the car before buying it. Teenor said he advises everyone to do this just to make sure the car is in good condition.

As far as paying for a used car, dealerships have several financial institutions to provide financing to assist in paying off the car.

Teenor said Briggs Central has nine different sources that provide financing, and they are very successful in helping people find affordable ways to pay for their car.

Another source to use when shopping around for a used car is the Consumer Report's Used Car Buying Guide.

"It's tough to tell if you're getting a reliable car, but Consumer Report is a good guide to give you more information on the good and bad features of the cars," Teenor said.

"It is not a bible, though. They've made mistakes about cars in the past," he said.

Some students at K-State have experience in buying used cars and say there are ways to avoid getting a bad deal on a car.

"I bought a used car because it saved me a lot of money. But it is important to make sure you know as best you can what you're getting," said Will Rettiger, sophomore in business.

"The Consumer Report gave me an idea what my chances were for getting a lemon," he said.

John Governski, a sales representative from Dick Edwards Ford Lincoln, said it was important to test-drive the car.

"Cars are machines, and all machines can break. Just make sure to test-drive the car, listen for noises, make sure everything works as it should, and pay attention to how it handles on the road. It should feel comfortable and should run smoothly," Governski said.

It is easy to get taken advantage of on prices if a person is not thorough about researching how much the car is worth.

"College students often get taken advantage of when they go places looking for a used car, because they are young and don't have a lot of experience negotiating prices and finding a good deal on a car," Mendels said.

Useful used car buying tips

- ✔ Look for low mileage
- ✔ Check out the interior and exterior for damage.
- ✔ Ask the dealer what type of warranty exists for the car
- ✔ Take the car to a mechanic to be examined
- ✔ Talk to the dealer about financing and payment plans
- ✔ Look up the car in the Consumer Report's Handbook
- ✔ Test drive the car
- ✔ Talk to the previous owner

STATE SEN. Paul Feleciano speaks to those in attendance Friday. Feleciano was speaking on campus for Hispanic Heritage Month.

CHALLENGE

Feleciano backed his point with statistics, showing that by 2003, the largest minority population will be Hispanic.

By 2023, 52.6 percent of the population will be minorities, he said.

These numbers will be useless unless minorities begin to work together, he said.

"Are you prepared to face the changes ahead?" he asked. "If not, I submit to you, you only have yourselves to blame. Nothing worthwhile in our society comes free."

Carmen Sanchez, Manhattan resident, said he was motivated by Feleciano's message.

"It's really nice someone of his stature from the Latino community came to speak to us," Sanchez said. "Being an election year, we need to know what to look for at the polls in November."

Elsa Diaz-Bautista, graduate student in business, was also pleased with the senator's message but hopes more students will attend the next speech in the series.

Tom Sawyer, state House of Representatives Democratic minority leader, will speak at 3:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Big 8 Room.

Rare transplant gives patient another chance

WICHITA (AP) — When Terry Waterhouse's kidney began failing in February, his wife knew what she had to do: give him one of her own in a rare spouse-to-spouse transplant.

Making the decision to donate a kidney was not hard for Mona Waterhouse. Waiting to do it was the difficult part.

"I'm a very impatient person," Mona said. "When I said I wanted to give him a kidney, it was like 'tomorrow.' "

The donation finally came a week ago, when the Dodge City couple went into the operating room at Via Christi Regional Medical Center-St. Francis Campus. They were released from the hospital Friday.

A spouse-to-spouse transplant is not unheard of, but it is relatively rare. St. Francis has had 575 kidney transplants since 1981, and 15 of those involved husbands and wives. In nine cases, the wife donated a kidney to the husband. In six cases, the husband was the donor.

Terry Waterhouse has had diabetes for 19 years. He has had kidney problems for the last two or so years, and he started three-times-a-week dialysis in March.

"I won't say I was really sick, but that really saps your strength. At least it did for me," he said.

The kidneys are a pair of organs that separate water and waste products from the blood and excrete them as urine through the bladder.

As the Waterhouses went through testing in preparation for the transplant, doctors discovered Terry Waterhouse had suffered a heart attack at some point.

A normal patient in his condition would have been given medicine. But because he was a transplant candidate, doctors recommended a bypass. So, about seven weeks ago, he underwent a quadruple bypass.

Doctors decided Mona Waterhouse's left kidney would be used for the transplant; they put it on Terry's right side.

"He's just got a little cut 6 or 8 inches," said Mona Waterhouse. "But mine goes clear around to my back."

After the surgery, Terry Waterhouse said he was not sure if he felt any better, but he was confident his health would improve. The first three months are the most crucial for a kidney transplant recipient because of the risks of infection and rejection.

Mona expects her husband to "sit on his butt and watch TV all winter," but she has another deadline for him.

Both of them often dress up in costumes and visit hospital pediatric wards. Now, she says, "We've got to get him well so we can do Santa Claus."

Ferret friends

Not-for-profit organization saves ferrets

STORY BY DEBBIE HOLLIS

Ferret Family Services, a not-for-profit organization, needs people familiar with ferrets to help with the placement and rehabilitation of 40-60 breeder ferrets.

FFS learned of the ferrets through an advertisement in a Wichita newspaper.

J.W. Friend, a ferret breeder in Fredonia, is trying to get out of the business.

"I'd rather sell out to a breeder, period," Friend said. "You know, if (the breeder) was reliable — there is some people that's pretty nutty about them things."

Troy Lynn Eckart, founder of Ferret Family Services, said she does not believe in breeding ferrets.

There are plenty of ferrets out there that need good homes, she said.

"Some people buy ferrets from pet stores, breeders or newspaper ads before researching what type of care ferrets need," Eckart said. "That's why we need ferret people."

Lack of education on how to properly breed ferrets is another problem, she said.

Friend, who began breeding ferrets 10 years ago, said he learned through hard luck.

"Everybody we knew that owned ferrets, I was ashamed to even compare myself to them as far as the way they kept up their pens and filthy animals," Friend said. "It's pretty bad. It's just like dogs and cats or anything else. You have good breeders and bad breeders, and we didn't know any good breeders."

Eckart said she felt Friend had done an acceptable job.

"As far as we can tell, they look pretty healthy," she said.

FFS has raised enough money to buy the ferrets. The challenge remains in finding foster and permanent homes with people who can help with the rehabilitation of the breeder ferrets.

"Breeders as a whole are pretty mean. They're not pets," Friend said of ferrets raised by breeders. "We have trouble with biting."

Eckart said this is because the ferrets have never been handled and played with. She said the ferrets were nippy because they were frightened.

"They're not vicious. It's just totally new to them," she said.

Eckart said FFS can help breeder ferrets make the transition to pets by finding them knowledgeable and caring families.

FFS has set Oct. 13 as a tentative date to buy the ferrets.

Eckart said FFS needs donations of carriers, food dishes and blankets to transport the ferrets.

Foster homes are also needed until permanent homes can be found, she said.

Committee examines funds

SPEED

▶ The Educational Opportunities Fund Committee started the examination process for allocating more than $200,000 in funds to more than 32 campus groups.

JILL STORY
staff writer

The Educational Opportunities Fund Committee rolled up its sleeves last night and set to work on allocations for fiscal year 1998.

The committee is working with a budget of $211,000, and members said they want to help as many students as possible with that money.

The funds they will disperse come directly from the student activity fee.

There are 32 groups asking for funding from the committee through detailed, written proposals, and two other groups who turned in their proposals late who could still be considered. Student Senate will have to decide whether the proposals will be approved for consideration.

First on the agenda at the meeting was to set criteria with which to evaluate the proposals.

Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, said it was imperative that the committee agree on the general goals so they would have a consistent way to prioritize the requests.

"We're trying to get the biggest bang for our buck here," said Bosco.

The general consensus was characterized by the Perez Doctrine, named for committee member John Perez, junior in business, who said that the EOF committee should allocate the money so as many students are benefited by it as possible.

Working with this criteria, the committee revised the list of proposals into a four-tiered priority list. The top tier includes those proposals the committee thinks would directly or indirectly benefit the most students and the proposals filter down from there.

The two proposals on the top tier deal with tutoring services and child care. The remaining tiers include funding proposals for community service, graduate teaching assistantships, and grants and scholarships.

The committee will finish its assessment of the proposals and the budget this month.

An appeals process will then allow applicants to clarify their proposals before first readings in Senate on Nov. 7.

The budget then returns to committee for adjustments and goes back to Senate. Final approval from President Jon Wefald is the last step.

K-State, KU shed blood in battle for trophy

SPEED

▶ Donors at Derby Food Center contributed 77 units yesterday – 23 shy of the target amount. Today, blood will be collected at K-State Student Union.

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

The American Red Cross is out for blood this week on the K-State campus.

They will be collecting blood from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today through Friday in the K-State Student Union. They will also collect from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Friday in Trotter Hall. Blood was collected Monday afternoon in Derby Food Center.

Susan Gormely, faculty coordinator for the blood drive, encourages everyone to stop by and give blood. Donors must be 17 years of age or older, be in good health and weigh more than 110 pounds.

"I like the idea of helping someone else, and donating blood is easy to do," Gormely said.

A competition will take place between K-State and the University of Kansas for the largest amount of blood collected. The winner will be awarded a traveling trophy, which is in K-State's possession after two successful blood drives last year.

KU held a blood drive last week and collected 613 units. Both schools have blood drives each semester. Last year, K-State collected 1,300 units of blood, compared with just more than 1,100 units at KU.

The goal for this week's blood drive is 900 units.

"This is an ambitious goal but certainly attainable. In years past, K-State has collected well over 1,000 units at each blood drive and has consistently been the largest blood drive in the state," Nancy Powell, American Red Cross representative, said.

The units collected at K-State are used by the Central Plains Region of the American Red Cross to supply blood to more than 110 hospitals in Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

Sponsors for the blood drive are Alpha Epsilon Delta, Alpha Phi Omega, Association of Residence Halls, Circle K, Delta Tau Delta, Golden Key National Honor Society, Pre-Nursing Club, Pre-Physical Therapy Club, Pre-Veterinary Medicine Club, Manhattan Christian College, Army ROTC and the American Red Cross.

Israel's demands must be met before withdrawal

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu refused to budge Monday from his demand for improved security for Jewish settlers in Hebron before Israel will honor its agreement to withdraw forces from the city.

In a tough policy speech opening the winter session of parliament, Netanyahu accused the Palestinians of undermining the peace process by trying to pressure Israel with violence, a reference to the gun battles between Israeli and Palestinian forces that killed 78 people last month.

"If every crisis and every frustration is justification for violence, then the process is doomed," Netanyahu said. "If they are really committed to the peace option, they must completely forswear the options of incitement and violence and war."

> "Either we have real peace – and real peace has a price, or we have empty declarations, an imaginary peace – and this has a heavier price.

Shimon Peres, a key architect of the peace accord with the Palestinians, accused Netanyahu of playing for time and of being insincere about his commitment to peace.

"Either we have real peace — and real peace has a price — or we have empty declarations, an imaginary peace — and this has a heavier price," said Peres, who was prime minister in the previous Labor Party government and lost his re-election bid to Netanyahu.

As parliament debated Netanyahu's policies Monday, Israeli and Palestinian negotiators met at the Erez checkpoint between Israel and the Gaza Strip for a second day of talks focused on Hebron, the last West Bank city under occupation.

The city, where about 450 Jewish settlers live among 94,000 Palestinians, has become a focus of Palestinian frustration because of the Netanyahu government's failure to withdraw Israeli troops as specified in agreements signed in 1993 with Israel's previous government.

"We will not accept changing the agreement," the chief Palestinian negotiator, Saeb Erakat, insisted after Wichita mom shoots daughter then self

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA, Kan. — Å Wichita woman drove her 11-year-old daughter to a downtown monument Sunday and shot the child in the head before killing herself, police said.

Lorrie Housholder, 36, and her daughter, Sabrina, were found by police near the Keeper of the Plains statue about 11 a.m., said Lt. Randy Wilson. He said the mother was dead at the scene with a gunshot wound to the head.

The daughter had "a similar wound," Wilson said, but was still alive when police discovered the bodies a short time after the shootings.

The daughter was taken to a hospital, where she died about 5 p.m., Sgt. Brad Agnew said.

The area around the monument is not a busy part of town, Agnew said.

"It's a section where two rivers converge, and people generally view the statue from the opposite bank," Agnew said. "It's an area that's difficult to get to."

A semi-automatic handgun was found at the scene, Wilson said.

Housholder may have been upset about a recent fight with her husband, Wilson said. He said the couple had a history of domestic disputes.

"It was marital difficulties that led to this," said Capt. Paul Dotson. "We're going to complete the investigation this week, but we're working it now as a murder-suicide."

Preparations key to success of national forensics qualifiers

Spend a week locked in a professor's cabin getting ready for the school year before it even starts.

That's what the K-State speech team did this August.

The preparation paid off Saturday and Sunday when two members qualified for the American Forensics Association national championship tournament. This is the earliest in the season any K-State competitor has ever qualified for nationals, which are in April.

"This is early this year," said Jeni Pruitt, who qualified for nationals in two events, persuasion and communication analysis.

"K-State usually gets a slow start," Pruitt, senior in electronic journalism, said. "We usually don't kick it in until second semester. We decided if we wanted to be competitive we needed to start early."

> SENIOR IN ELECTRONIC JOURNALISM

Pruitt said each member of the team has a specialty.

"It's kind of like a track meet where each person competes individually, but you're competing for the team," she said.

Pruitt and Wesley Schawe, sophomore in mathematics, qualified by the at-large method. This means they added three of their places in an event, and it totaled eight or less.

For instance, Pruitt placed first, third and first in persuasion to total five. She placed third, second and second in communication analysis to total seven.

Schawe placed first, second and fourth to total seven in informative speaking.

Craig Brown, head coach of the individual events team, said informative speaking is what it sounds like — it's meant to inform people.

"It ends up being a glorified show-and-tell," Brown said. "It's also supposed to be something people want to listen to."

He said Schawe's topic, a new hybrid wheat, is a good example of making people interested.

"He jokes about the sex life of wheat," Brown said.

Schawe said this wheat hybrid is a big deal in the agriculture world. He said the hybrid, called Genesis, could lead to better harvests and increased yields.

Schawe said informative speaking relies on trial and error.

"We ended up lucking out," he said. "There was a lot of information at the library. And I could actually go over and talk to a professor on campus, and he could help me understand it."

• LOU DOUGLAS LECTURE CANCELED. The Lou Douglas Lecture featuring Madeline M. Kunin, the former Deputy Secretary of Education at the United States Department of Education, has been canceled. The lecture was supposed to be today at 7:30 p.m., but Kunin was recently named ambassador to Switzerland and she is currently out of the country, said Vickie Choitz, the Lou Douglas Lecture Series coordinator for UFM.

• RURAL INITIATIVES LUNCHEON. The Kansas Center for Rural Initiatives will sponsor a luncheon from 11:45 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. Oct. 16 in the Cottonwood Room of the K-State Student Union. Chris McKenzie, executive director of the League of Kansas Municipalities, will be the featured speaker. His topic is titled, "Kansas Communities in the Year 2000." Deadline for reservations is Thursday or when capacity is reached. The cost is $6.80. For more information contact KCRI at (913) 532-6868.

• DECOMPOSED BODY FOUND IN DERBY. Authorities are trying to identify the badly decomposed body of a man found in the Arkansas River.

A canoeist discovered the man's body Sunday afternoon in about 4 feet of water in the river between Derby and Mulvane, Sedgwick County Sheriff's Lt. John Daily said.

The cause of death was unknown, and an autopsy was scheduled Monday, Daily said.

• GRACE SIGNS CONTRACT WITH CUBS. After a career-year with the bat, Mark Grace agreed Monday to return to the Chicago Cubs for at least two more seasons, agreeing to a $9.35 million contract with a team option for 1999.

Grace, a two-time All-Star and three-time Gold Glove first baseman, finished in the NL's top 10 in hitting this year for the seventh time in his nine major-league seasons, all with the Cubs.

• CYCLIST HAMPSTEN RETIRES. Andy Hampsten, one of the world's top cyclists, retired Monday. Hampsten, 34, won the 1988 Tour of Italy, joining three-time Tour de France winner Greg LeMond as the only U.S. cyclists to win any of the sport's major European tours.

• HANSPARD, FARLEY NAMED BIG 12 PLAYERS OF THE WEEK. Texas Tech running back Byron Hanspard scored two touchdowns as the Red Raiders downed previously unbeaten Baylor 45-24 in Tech's homecoming game to become Big 12 Offensive Player of the Week.

He has six 200-yards-plus rushing performances in his last seven games. On the other side of the line, Nebraska linebacker Terrell Farley was named Big 12 defensive player of the week as he spearheaded a Cornhuskers defense that helped shut down host K-State 39-3.

K-State designs database to help astronauts interpret space photos

staff reporter

NASA and K-State may sound totally unrelated, but they're not.

M. Duane Nellis, professor of geography and associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, was recently awarded a $10,000 grant from NASA to help in develop computer-based geographic information system databases for the Flint Hills of Kansas.

"We're developing the database to provide to the Earth Science Branch at NASA. It will also be used to train astronauts at the Johnson Space Center in Houston. It's where the prime astronaut training program is located," Nellis said.

These systems will provide information on the soils, terrain, vegetation and hydraulic network. They will also help to provide information on pictures of Earth that the shuttle missions bring back.

Every time the shuttle goes into space thousands of pictures are taken of Earth's surface.

The systems Nellis is helping to create will help associate these pictures with the actual surface they identify.

Nellis

The systems should take about 12 months to complete, Nellis said.

"The pictures will also be used to try and understand regional change, rural land use change within the Flint Hills, and monitor changes within the ecosystem. Hopefully this will lead to further research contracts with NASA associated with this particular initiative," Nellis said.

This project is one of several at K-State that NASA sponsors. This project should be able to provide information on the effects of seasonal burning and recovery, and provide more information on global change, Nellis said.

Once the database is completed, one version will stay in Kansas, and another version will be transformed to the Johnson Space Center.

"Through the Internet we can access each other's databases for updating and communicating on-site," Dr. Kam Lulla, chief of the Earth Science Branch for NASA and chief of the astronaut-training program for NASA, said.

Although direct communication with the space shuttle is limited strictly to Houston, the materials developed at K-State will be used in orbit, Lulla said.

Kansas is one of 10 sites in the U.S. that will help with these information systems, and there are 25 sites worldwide, Lulla said.

Stock market record recovering

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The Dow Jones industrial average's first-ever move above 6,000 was fleeting, but other stock measures edged to new highs Monday as investors braced for a blizzard of third-quarter earnings reports.

The Nasdaq market returned to record territory for the first time in four months, having taken nearly a month longer than the broad market to rebound from July's steep selloff.

The Dow bobbed above 6,000 twice in the first half hour, but then spent the remainder of Monday's session with a small deficit from Friday's record close, falling 13.05 to 5,979.81 by the closing bell.

Still, the move past 6,000 punctuated a dramatic 800-point rebound from the market's summertime blues and cameless than a year after the Dow broke the 5,000 mark, which was just before last Thanksgiving.

The stock-and-bond markets were pressured throughout Monday's session by profit taking on Friday's big rally. The Dow soared 60 points on Friday after the government reported that unemployment unexpectedly edged higher in September from a seven-year low in August.

The data eased worries about potential inflation from rising production costs and helped validate the Federal Reserve's decision two weeks ago not to slow the economy, and perhaps company profits, by raising the central bank's key lending rates.

But with the market facing a barrage of earnings reports for the July-September quarter, investors were hesitant about launching another buying spree.

"The market really got in front of itself (on Friday) and over-celebrated the fact that maybe we can get through the year without the Fed raising interest rates," said Robert Froehlich, chief investment strategist at Van Kampen American Capital in Oakbrook Terrace, Ill.

Analysts said it was noteworthy that the Nasdaq's advance was led again by blue-chip issues such as Intel and Microsoft, which — like the 30 Dow industrials — have benefited from a more cautious attitude among investors following July's selloff.

Student exchanges classroom time for Russian environmental conference

TARA WRAY
staff reporter

One K-State student got a break from the daily routine of going to class. Instead he spent time halfway around the world.

Brian Becker, senior in anthropology, wildlife biology and natural resources environmental sciences, presented a paper at the 1996 International Ecological Conference held in Voronezh, Russia.

"I talked about indigenous peoples and their involvement in wildlife conservation," Becker said.

The conference was held at the Voronezh Institute of Technology, which up until a few years ago was not open to visitors from the West.

"It was a military industrial city," Becker said. "It was closed until a few years ago."

Becker said K-State helped organize the conference with the idea that future conventions might be held here. He traveled with 30 others from K-State.

Becker was one of only two undergraduates who made the trip to Russia. The other was from Colorado.

He said most of the people participating in the conference were professors, administrators and former bureaucrats.

"Mainly it was an exchange of ideas about conservation, science, agriculture and biology," he said. "It was a mutual exchange."

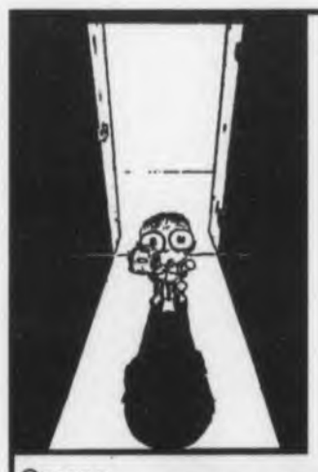
Becker said among the other topics discussed at the conference were the ramifications of exploiting natural resources, erosion control and the impact of pesticides.

"We discussed the impacts of environmental problems and solving those problems," Becker said.

Becker said despite the obvious language barrier, the conference went well due to the number of presenters who spoke English.

"Usually with a few gestures or words, you can accomplish what you need," Becker said. "But basically everything had to be said twice."

Becker said during his seven-day stay, he learned about Russian culture and how fragile the government is there. He noted that a big difference between Russian and American culture is the level of friendliness.



"Russians are very, very friendly people once you start talking to them," he said. "They're very warm people."

In the future, Becker said he would like to return to Russia, but before that can happen a lot must be accomplished.

"I would love to go back," he said. "If I do go back, there is a lot of research that needs to be done."

Becker said he took a lot away from his privately funded trip to Russia, especially an appreciation for the native people.

"The people are very proud of their heritage," he said. "The younger generations are dreadfully optimistic."

IN OUR OPINION

Giving blood can make the donator feel good; it can also help save a life

Sometimes it's hard to prepare for the future. Saving money or getting ahead of the game isn't all that feasible.

But there is one thing you can do to prepare for your future, the future of someone you know and love or the future of someone who you don't even know but who will sincerely appreciate your gift.

WHY WE CARE

It won't hurt much. You won't die, but you might be preventing someone else from dying if you donate at the Red Cross blood drive this week.

Give blood.

The American Red Cross will be collecting blood from 9:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. today through Friday in the K-State Student Union.

It will also be collecting from 10:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Friday in Trotter Hall.

You might have some reservations about giving away part of your bodily fluids to a perfect stranger.

This is understandable, but it is not very rational.

Maybe you think it'll hurt.

It might pinch a little, but we're all grown-ups here. I think we can handle a little shot.

Now's a great time to get over that needle phobia you've been nursing.

You think you might pass out or get woozy.

You might, but let's look on the bright side: You get free cookies and orange juice to bring your blood sugar back up.

Chances are, though, you will probably be fine.

Maybe you're still living in a cave and think you can get HIV or another disease from giving blood.

You can't. Phelbotomists use the strictest sterilization and safety measures to ensure that disease is not spread to you or the person receiving the blood.

Maybe you think there's too much of a time commitment involved. You say you're too busy.

It takes less than an hour.

We're sure you can find an hour out of your schedule to help save a life.

Any negative feelings or little bit of pinching you might have to endure to give blood will probably be outweighed by the fact that you're saving a life.

Giving blood won't have too much of a long-term effect on your life, other than a lasting feeling that you've done a good deed.

But it will have a lasting effect on the person who receives your blood. It could save a life. It could even be you who needs the blood — or someone you love.

And if that's not enough motivation for you, let's get down to University pride. This is a competition between the University of Kansas and K-State.

And if there's one thing K-State likes to do, it's beat KU.

Let's save a life for Willie!

There's no such thing as a free, fat-free lunch

MY

Keely SCHIELDS

One thing grocery shoppers can depend on is no matter how many cookies and bags of chips are in their carts, the checkout line will be studded with magazines saying they can eat it all and lose weight anyway.

"Shed those stubborn pounds for free!"

Maybe there is reason to be a little skeptical about such claims.

In my own mind, the notion that anything desirable will cost me nothing unfailingly starts a red light of doubt flashing.

It's just not that often a good thing is absolutely free.

The day before the K-State Student Union's new Starbucks counter officially opened, I happened to be walking by as the person behind the counter finished making a practice mocha. She asked me if I wanted it, and of course, I did.

I took that free mocha and, hugging it to me, stole as far out of sight as I could.

While I was drinking it, I half-expected someone to show up at any moment and say, "Ha! You didn't really think you wouldn't have to pay for that, did you?"

That feeling hindered my enjoyment of an otherwise tasty coffee beverage.

Similarly, no woman is merely flattering her own sexual allure by worrying about how she might be expected to reimburse a man who, on their first date, insists on paying for dinner, the movie and coffee afterward. At the very least, she will shell out some guilt for either the money she didn't pay or the visit to the sack she wouldn't pay.

On the other hand, believing you've gotten off scot-free — or even really cheap — can give a feeling of sneaky elation.

My record club is forever offering super buy-one-get-one-for-$2.99-type deals. What it fails to mention in print quite so boldly is that all the bargain compact discs I buy and all the shipping and handling I pay don't make so much as a dent in the fulfillment of my membership agreement.

In fact, the more bargains I take advantage of, the longer I seem to be obligated to the record club.

And who has ever walked into Victoria's Secret when there wasn't a sale going on? I think the store might just as easily ask $18 apiece for its bras as charge $36 for the first and nothing for the second.

Then there's the matter of the matching panties, but I won't go into that here.

Either way, customers pay the same amount. The big difference is that simply paying the same amount for each bra of the same style doesn't offer the sense of having gotten something for free.

It's neither a very clever trick nor a very difficult strategy to understand. When you get right down to it, though, people truly want to be tricked in this way — they want to believe good things come free or cheap.

Is it any wonder then, that there is so much excitement over the latest weight-loss wonder drug, Redux?

It has proven its effectiveness in curbing appetites, so in a nation desperately of people wanting to trim their waistlines, everybody wants a fix.

Is it any surprise either, that Redux has undesirable side effects ranging from the annoying to the arguably dangerous?

I could guess the same thing about virtually any new super drug with pretty decent accuracy.

Strangely enough, the desirable is nearly always accompanied by the undesirable — the price there is to pay.

I think of the fairly common belief that free-verse poetry must be easier on the poet because she doesn't have to deal with meter and rhyme.

However, as T.S. Eliot famously put it, "No verse is free for the man who wants to do a good job."

Structure and conventions aside, a good poem costs the poet something.

In the same way, losing weight inevitably costs a person something. It's not a matter of an easy or a temporary change.

Despite the claims of checkout line magazines and the initial successes of wonder drugs, becoming physically fit ultimately costs nothing less than a drastic change of lifestyle.

There's no free or easy about it.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

Columnist says he thinks election policy restricts information

In this country, we consider ourselves free, protected by the Bill of Rights in the matters of freedom of speech.

MY

Lach FRANQUEMONT

Those involved in media are also protected by freedom of the press.

These are rights we cherish and would fight tooth and nail to protect.

It is therefore strange to me that a newspaper would willingly tie its hands behind its back, especially a month before a presidential election.

I am writing here about the Collegian and its new policies regarding political discourse. For those of you who missed the editorial board's piece about it, here it is.

The Collegian will not endorse candidates in any way. To ensure they are not accused of covertly endorsing a candidate, they wish to ensure all candidates receive equal coverage.

This is a noble sentiment. The problems come in in the execution of this plan.

Candidates will only be covered in a news story. No letters to the editor will be accepted commenting on these news stories. In fact, no letters to the editor will be accepted at all if they in any way deal with a candidate.

Because no letters can come in response to an opinion piece on a candidate, it was decided that it would be unfair to have opinion columnist be able to comment on a candidate.

Evidently, those in power here at the paper believe college students are incapable of telling the difference between a news story and opinion.

Therefore, they would be led to believe the Collegian was endorsing a candidate instead of the individual opinion columnist.

In the previous three semesters I have worked at the Collegian, not once has one of my columns had any Collegian input.

Neither have any of them been refused publication because of content.

Now this has happened, and you, the readers, were not able to read a column of mine dealing with one of the candidates for high public office.

For one minute, think of what is wrong about this policy. Not only are opinion columnists now hampered by what they cannot do, but the readers aren't allowed to comment on any candidate through the letters to the editor section.

In essence, the Collegian is now partially responsible for some of the apathy they cry so hard against.

By confining politics to news only, it makes it seem dry and sterile.

> "Instead of worrying about perfect balance in the paper, the Collegian should be looking to get as much information out as possible."

This is particularly true with some of the me-too candidates we have involved in local politics.

Instead worrying about perfect balance in the paper, the Collegian should be looking to get as much information out as possible.

Letters to the editor can serve as a public forum for point and counterpoint on numerous issues involving the candidates seeking to lead us.

The reason I write this column is twofold. First, I wish to challenge everyone with an opinion on this issue to flood the Collegian with letters to the editor. Maybe I'm wrong and you all enjoy the current sterile news coverage. If you don't, let them know, because you are the constituents that it is set up to serve.

The second reason I write this column is that I hope to prove to you this page is just as its title implies. Opinion. I have mine, and it's just as common as posterior regions.

I am not a tool the Collegian uses to propagate a position, but I am an independent writer who is luckier than most in that I have a weekly forum to express my opinion in.

Fundraiser to move chimps outdoors after 15 years indoors

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

Last June, Sunset Zoological Park kicked off a brick paving stone campaign with a goal of raising $100,000 for the indoor-outdoor African Forest Trail Chimpanzee Exhibit.

Recently, it surpassed 30 percent of that goal.

The chimpanzees at Sunset Zoo have not been outside for more than 15 years.

The new exhibit will provide an outdoor area for the chimpanzees.

The bricks are available in two sizes: 4 inches by 8 inches for $50, or 8 inches by 8 inches for $250.

The bricks will have the name of the person or organization who purchased them engraved in the surface, and the lettering will be filled in black so the name can be easily read.

The bricks will make up a separate pathway off the main path next to the chimpanzee exhibit.

Angie Fenstermacher, marketing and development director for Sunset Zoo, said the zoo, which is owned by the city of Manhattan, has received bonding authority for up to $500,000 toward the project.

The money raised from the brick campaign goes to fund the rest of the project.

"Our goal for that is $100,000," Fenstermacher said.

Sunset Zoo has raised more than $30,000.

Scott Shoemaker, Sunset Zoo director, said the preliminary estimate for the chimpanzee exhibit is $550,000.

"A lot of people say, 'Why does an exhibit like this cost so much? You could build a really nice house for $500,000,'" Fenstermacher said.

> "Considering a full-grown chimpanzee is 10 times stronger than a human, you have to build an exhibit that is pretty strong."
> • ANGIE FENSTERMACHER
> MARKETING AND DEVELOPMENT DIRECTOR FOR SUNSET ZOO

"Considering a full-grown chimpanzee is 10 times stronger than a human, you have to build an exhibit that is pretty strong," she said.

She said the chimpanzees have all day to think of ways to get out of the exhibits, so the steel bars must be very strong.

"We have to include all of the safety measures," Fenstermacher said.

Shoemaker met with the architects last week to go over the final plans for the chimpanzee exhibit.

He said Nov. 13 is the tentative date for Sunset Zoo to receive bids for the project. The Manhattan City Commission should then give its final approval in early December.

Shoemaker said ground-breaking should take place in mid-December.

Sunset Zoo will continue to sell bricks until April or until the supply runs out.

Union to deliver pizzeria this fall, burgers to follow in the spring

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

Credit for the noticeable changes that have and will occur in K-State food services may be given to the new management.

Professional Food-Service Management Inc. is a national contracted food company that has been employed at K-State for 2-1/2 months.

PFM provides management for catering services, the Bluemont Room and the traditional food lines in the Stateroom. It also will coordinate the branded concepts brought into food service.

"What we planned was that we could improve our purchasing power by going with a national company," Bernard Pitts, K-State Student Union director, said.

PFM is on about 120 college campuses and will bring experience and research to K-State food service.

"We are one of the larger accounts PFM has, so they're going through a learning curve with us," Pitts said.

Paul Stolle, director of dining services, said PFM oversees daily food service expenses for the Union and makes recommendations for cut-backs and changes on a weekly basis.

Stolle said not only does it work as eyes and ears, but uses all five senses to discover alternatives to limit expenses and increase sales in food service.

"We intend it to be the best for students and it doesn't always work, so you go back to the drawing board," he said.

Stolle said continuous input from students helps.

There is a comment box located next to the cashier station and Stolle is open to suggestions from students. The dining services office is outside the Stateroom on the main level of the Union.

The change in food service management will accompany the Union expansion project that is in the making. PFM's design department is working with architects to plan the most efficient way to put the food court together.

Bringing franchises in before structural renovations occur will be beneficial because they will be able to communicate to designers specifically what their equipment and utility needs are.

Surveys conducted on campus two years ago determined what food groupings students, faculty and staff would like to see on campus.

"It basically showed support for a pizza, a burger and a Mexican food item," Pitts said.

"The intent, eventually, is to have branded concepts that are going to be recognized as the students come here with eating habits that involve those national chains," he said.

Amigos, one of the latest additions to the Stateroom cafeteria, filled the Mexican item slot and the pizza and burger franchises are still being negotiated.

Amigos and the burger franchise will be in the Stateroom, and the pizza will be in Union Station. The pizza franchise can be expected to make its way to the Union this semester and the burger franchise next semester.

Pitts said because many students come to the Union for their important nutritional meal, the traditional food line will remain.

Because food services are undergoing significant changes and will make several adaptations, it will take time.

"This boat of our food services has moved along for 40 years, and you can't just disassemble it and put it back together without some time span to test things out and see how things work," Pitts said.

Pruitt qualified in persuasion and communication analysis. Brown said persuasion in a problem-solution format.

Pruitt's persuasion topic is Drug Abuse Resistance Education. She argues DARE is ineffective.

"It has a 3-percent effective rate," Pruitt said. "That's less than the study's margin of error."

She said the program was started in Los Angeles.

"It was just such a neat idea that they went nationwide with it," Pruitt said. "But they never did a pilot test."

Brown said in communication analysis the competitor looks at an act of communication and talks about why it worked or why it didn't.

"In Jeni's case she's looking at how NASA is trying to market the Mars rock," Brown said.

Before NASA discovered evidence of life on Mars, President Clinton was talking about cutting NASA funding, Pruitt said.

Now NASA is planning a $400 billion trip to Mars, she said.

Pruitt will make her fourth trip to nationals this spring, and Schawe will make his second.

MU tickets available

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

The Missouri football ticket office has started a Big 12 football ticket package for Tiger games.

"We are dropping our ticket price from $22 to $12 a ticket if you buy at least four tickets for the game," Tracy Largent, chief clerk of ticket services, said.

For More Information
Contact Missouri ticket office at 1-800-CAT-PAWS.

With the new ticket package, K-State fans can buy four tickets, but not more than 12.

The new package will only last until Thursday.

"Since Oct. 12 is our Big 12 home opener, we are trying to promote that game with this package," Largent said.

Wildcat coach remains hospitalized

SHANA NEWELL
staff reporter

K-State co-defensive coordinator Bob Cope remains hospitalized after a diagnosis of cancer last week.

Cope

Cope has been in a coma since Tuesday evening at Mercy Health Center in Manhattan.

Coach Bill Snyder said he has visited Cope at the hospital and although Cope remains unconscious, he has tried to come out of the coma.

"I went and saw him this morning before the game," Snyder said Saturday afternoon.

"He squeezed my hands and opened his eyes for a moment. He is beginning to make some progress."

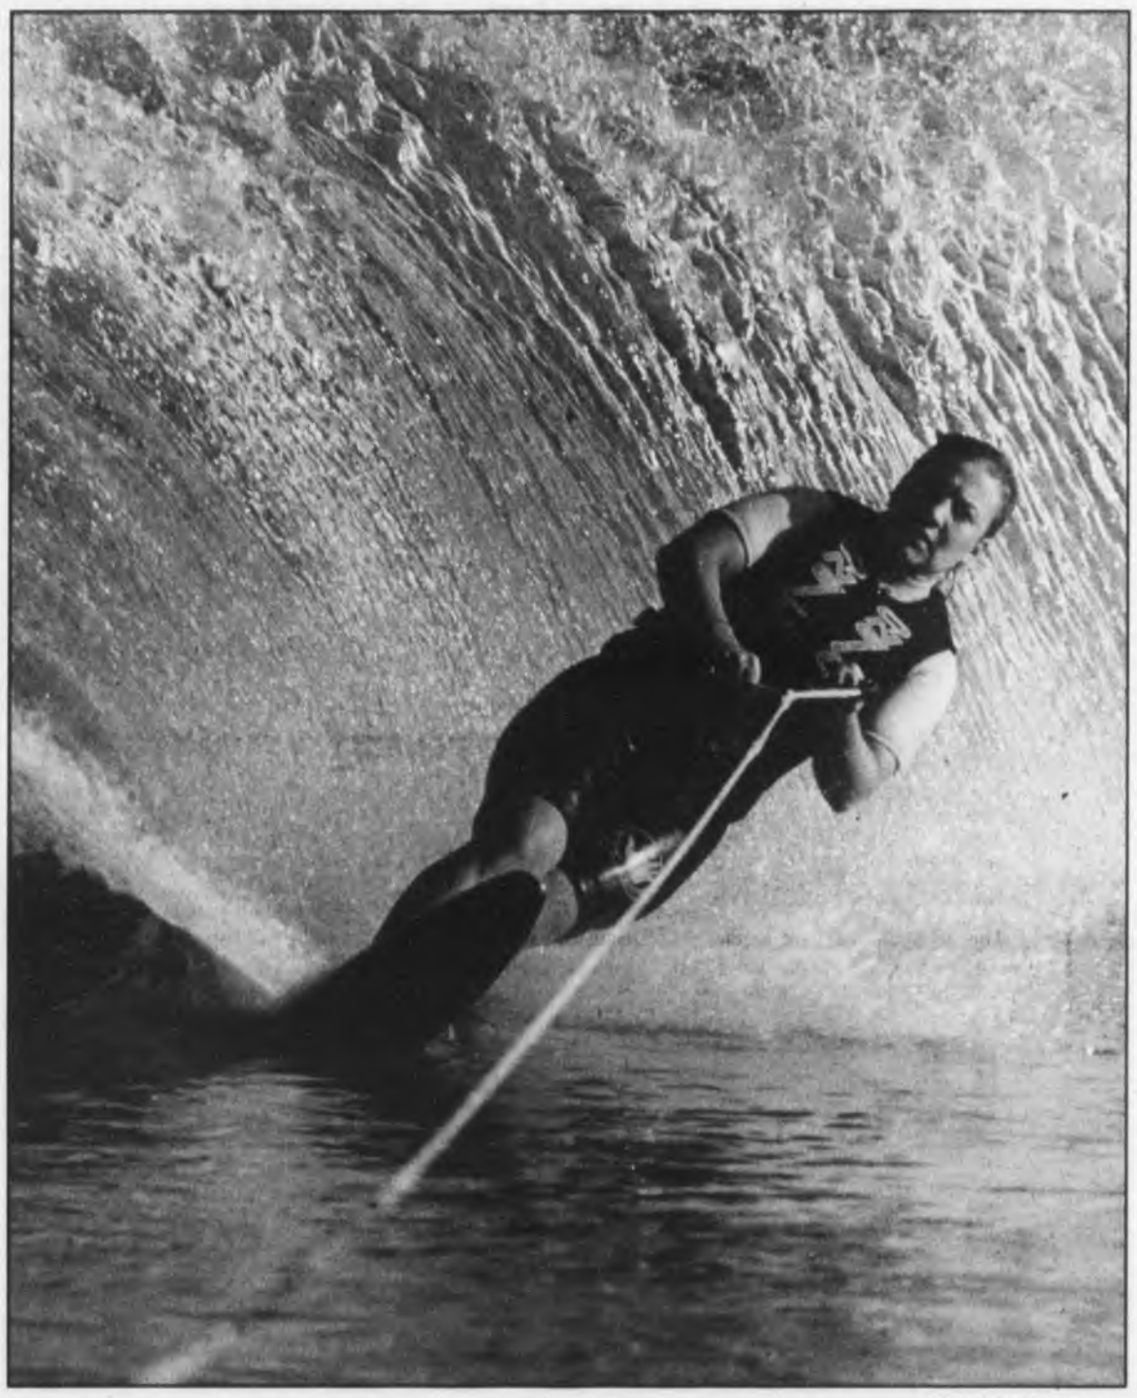
As to whether Cope's illness affected the Wildcats on Saturday against Nebraska, Snyder said he hoped not.

"We have no excuses," he said. "We wanted to play well. I would hope we had the strength of character to withstand this."

In Cope's absence, Snyder said Cope's responsibilities have been distributed among other coaches.

"Certainly we played shorthanded," he said.

"But we distributed the responsibilities. You miss a guy like Bobby, but still we were able to manage the management responsibilities."



Sophomore linebacker Travis Ochs said Cope's absence affected his performance, if only as a motivation.

"He was on my mind," Ochs said. "I wanted to win this game for him. He's a special man for me, for the rest of the defense and for the rest of the team. He was definitely on the back of my mind, and I apologize to him for the loss."

Senior cornerback Joe Gordon said he agreed Cope was on the mind of many of the players.

"We're all praying for him," Gordon said.

"A lot of the guys wished he could have been here, but I'm not sure it distracted them."

In the Wake of things

story by Tara Wray

Despite frosty winters in Kansas, for some members of the K-State Water Ski Team, skiing is not just a fair-weather sport.

"I've been out there on Christmas Day, skiing in a Santa suit," said Cory Huey, sophomore in engineering and ski team member. "I wear a wetsuit underneath, though."

The K-State Water Ski Team, which is made up of about 30 skiers, is composed of both beginners and avid participants.

"It's for people who enjoy skiing and want to give competition a try," said Teryl Hixon, senior in life sciences and club president, "people who have slalomed but might not have competed."

Fourteen members traveled Sept. 28 to Indiana to compete against other Midwestern schools in regional competition.

The team placed fifth overall, and the finish formally ended the competitive season until after spring break, but Hixon said practices will take place.

Team practices, which are not formally scheduled, are at Tuttle Creek Reservoir. K-State does not furnish a boat for the team, and that leaves it up to volunteers to drive for them.

"It's usually people who have dedicated their time to pulling us," Hixon said. "There are some members with boats also."

Team skis are available for two events: trick skiing, in which members attempt as many tricks as possible in 20 seconds; and jump, where a skier skis off a ramp and sails for distance.

Hixon said it's preferable if members furnish their own equipment for slalom skiing, which only requires skis. In slalom skiing, skiers maneuver around a course of six buoys with gates.

Ski team members are required to pay $35 in dues and register with the American Water Ski Association. Team meetings are at 9 p.m. Mondays.

Freshman golfer making waves for Cats

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Usually with a team, a coach has to wait for a freshman to develop and make a contribution.

But not so with Wildcat golfer Carrie Chambers, a true freshman.

In her first collegiate tournament at the Chip-N Invitational, Chambers tied for 24th, posting an 80 in the second round.

"I wasn't too happy with my performance. I was expecting lower scores," Chambers said.

But the displeasure wasn't shared by her coach. Instead, she drew rave reviews.

"I was very pleased with her performance. She made mistakes, but she didn't go off the deep end," Coach Kristi Knight said.

Her teammates shared Knight's enthusiasm.

"I thought Carrie did very well for her first tournament," teammate Desiree Simmons said. "Carrie is going to be a great player."

It didn't take long for Chambers to prove Simmons right.

In just her second collegiate tournament, Chambers posted a two-round total of 157 to win the individual title at the Northern Iowa Invitational.

On the first day, Chambers posted a 77 to take the lead.

"There was a little more pressure on me the second day since I had the lead," Chambers said. "But I wasn't too worried about the individual title. I just wanted the team to win the title."

On the third hole, a bizarre thing happened to Chambers.

The shaft on her Tommy Armour driver broke.

Because rules state golfers cannot replace broken drivers with another driver, Chambers was forced to play the rest of the round with a 3-wood.

> "Here I've had to learn how to manage my time and be realistic with what I can and can't do.
> — CARRIE CHAMBERS, K-STATE GOLFER

"It made the course a lot longer for me," Chambers said. "With hitting a 3-wood off the tee, it made my second shots a lot longer. It probably added some strokes onto my score."

"It really impressed me that Carrie shot an 80 going off the tees with a 3-wood," junior Danielle Hernandez said. "That really shows how good Carrie Chambers is."

As a senior in Elk City, Okla., Chambers finished second in the Oklahoma 4A State Championships. She was recruited during the fall of her senior season by the Cats and decided to sign with K-State early in the fall season before receiving any offers from other schools.

"I just really liked the team when I met them," Chambers said. "I liked the idea of having a new coach and a fresh start with the team."

Chambers said she thought she had the ability to have an immediate effect at K-State.

But Chambers said adjusting to the college atmosphere hasn't been easy.

"There is a lot more pressure at the college level," she said. "In high school, you basically just have golf to worry about.

"Here, I've had to learn how to manage my time and be realistic with what I can and can't do."

Although she has enjoyed some recent success, Chambers knows she has things to work on.

"I need to get stronger in my short game," she said. "I've been missing a lot of greens. I haven't had a lot of confidence around the greens.

"I just need to know that I will have the confidence to be able to get up and down if I need to."

One thing is for sure. Confidence in Chambers' ability is not lacking in her teammates.

"I'm just really impressed with her," Hernandez said. "She's very competitive. She's on top of things. She has one goal — she doesn't want to lose, and she didn't."

Men's team competing in Houston

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

The K-State men's golf team began play Monday at Sam Houston State's Woodlands Intercollegiate Tournament in Houston.

One of the 18 teams competing is Jackson State, the defending tournament champion. Nebraska will also compete.

The Cats are coming off a 16th-place finish at the Kansas Invitational and a 16th-place finish at the Falcon Cross-Creek Invitational.

Coach Mark Elliott said the lack of good play from the Cats is a concern.

"Golf is a game of confidence, and they just don't have it now," he said.

Elliott said the team is a different team during practice.

"There is about a three- to five-shot difference with the players from practice to the tournament play," he said.

"During the tournament, they get a little excited. There is a little pressure. We need to learn to handle our emotions better," Elliott said.

The tournament will be played at the Woodlands T.P.C. golf course, a course familiar to Elliott.

"It will be the hardest course we have faced this year. It is really difficult," Elliott said.

Cat fans sold out to Nebraska crowd; Husker contingent helped win game

All last week people talked about selling their Nebraska tickets. How much they would get for them and how they would spend their money were questions many asked. Little did K-State fans know they were selling their tickets to Nebraska's 12th man, its fans.

Not only did our football team get spanked on Saturday, but our fans also got taken to school on crowd support by the masters.

It seemed there were fewer Nebraskans here for the game than they used to bring in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Yet they came into KSU Stadium and completely took over, helping their team win the game.

I won't go so far as to say our fans suck. But I will say one of the few things that stands between our being a top-25 team and a national championship contender is our fans. This is a serious problem that needs to be corrected.

MY

Chad HELIN

Showing up seven hours early to drink beer does not make a good fan. Nor does yelling negative things or leaving before the game is over. And it's definitely not selling your ticket and watching the game at home. This weekend we didn't do our job.

I don't want to hear one person, unless you're a player, talk about K-State's getting beat by Nebraska. We didn't live up to our end of the bargain — the unspoken bargain that says Coach Bill Snyder will prepare the team, the team will perform to its highest ability, and we will cheer for it, giving it some sort of home-field advantage.

I know you're thinking, "If such a bargain does exist, we aren't the only ones who didn't keep up our end. There's no way our fans could have changed the total domination that took place on the field."

If we had done our part Saturday, at least we would know our team lost on its own ability or lack of ability. Didn't your mom ever tell you that if you can't say something nice, you shouldn't say anything at all? I guess not. Complete silence might have been better than the negativity coming from our fans.

The majority of negative comments dealt with the quarterback situation, which isn't really a situation. Earlier in the semester, Shana Newell explained in her column that this quarterback bashing will not help our team win games. Apparently no one took her seriously. Well, you'd better start listening.

I admit Brian Kavanagh looked like a rusty Carl Straw (at best) this weekend. But we can't forget he is our No. 1 man. I know all the genius armchair coaches in the stands seem to think Jonathan Beasley is the answer.

Let me remind you of one thing. Those are the same people who cheered when Kavanagh came in to replace Matt Miller last year.

Let's face it. Kavanagh is the quarterback who will lead us into postseason play. He's a smart player who knows the offense. He needs our support for the rest of the season, so let's give it to him.

I see potential in Beasley, just like everyone else. His scrambling ability and strong arm will make him a good quarterback in the future. In the future.

Unless Snyder makes the decision that Beasley should be our start, which I can't imagine him doing, we need to close all discussion on this topic.

There, does that clear up any problems you might have had? Let's focus on the task at hand — the rest of the season.

Saturday, K-State travels to Columbia to play the Tigers. Man, I feel sorry for these guys. The Wildcats will be hungry for a win, and the Tigers will have to feel the anger.

After Missouri, it's on to Texas A&M. They haven't had the greatest year, but playing at College Station is no easy task. The Cats will still be too much for the Aggies. No school reception records for Albert Connell against our defensive secondary.

Family weekend is a perfect time to invite the Sooners to Manhattan to beat up on. Hopefully, our fans won't try to sell their tickets to this one. It will be a big win.

Before Kansas hosts us, they meet Colorado, Nebraska and Iowa State back-to-back-to-back. The poor Jayhawks will fall victim to tough scheduling. K-State fans can redeem themselves from the Nebraska disappointment. Rock chalk Jayhawk, you lose.

After the victory in Lawrence, our boys head out to the Rockies.

This will be our annual second big test. A win has eluded us so far, but times are changing. With a much less potent running attack than Nebraska, the Buffaloes will be forced to pass against our defense. Enough said.

Finally, K-State ends the season where it started — at home, hosting Troy Davis — I mean Iowa State. This is our (the fans') last chance to prove we've gotten it together.

There you have it, 10-1.

You don't think it will happen that way? Well, before you decide our season is over, I would like to remind you Nebraska is one of the best football teams in the country. We didn't have what we needed to win the game, but it wasn't like we lost to a gimme.

Stop walking around with your heads down. We should be proud of our Cats. They are also one of the best teams in the country. With our help, they can be the best.

When the Cats come back home Oct. 26, let's do our part to ensure a victory. I don't want to hear anything but cheers of praise. Don't forget, Mom will be here for that one.

Theatre restored

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ANCIENT EPIDHAVROS, Greece — Buried for more than 23 centuries, a small theater in this old port town came to life this year as part of an effort to forge a tangible link between ancient and modern times.

"After all these centuries, we are trying to give it life, to make it real. Here the connection to the past is tangible and something you can touch and can touch you," Evanghelia Protonotariou Deilakis, archaeologist, said.

The small 4th-century B.C. amphitheater, which in ancient times could seat an estimated 5,000 to 6,000 people, this summer was host to nearly 600 people during weekend musical events in restored sections.

First dug up by Deilakis in 1970, the "Little Theater," as it is called, is overshadowed by the famous nearby ancient theater of Epidhavros, which seats about 16,000 and has been host to theatrical events since 1954.

The decision to allow the use of the Little Theater is part of an attempt by the Culture Ministry to bring people closer to some of the lesser-known ancient theaters and medieval castles around the country.

Culture Minister Stavros Benos recently announced an ambitious decade-long program to spend $104 million to restore 25 ancient Greek and Roman theaters and 39 castles.

"This program's clear direction is to harmonize these monuments with modern culture and our era," Benos said.

Benos said his ministry chose the monuments — there are 120 ancient theaters scattered around Greece — because they could be restored and used by people.

He said the restoration effort would be split into two separate programs.

One includes the restoration of the theaters while the other focuses on castles.

The latter would draw tourists to rarely visited areas of Greece and let them stay in the renovated castles.

"Its aim is to save and promote the castles, show their historical interconnection as well as advance a new form of tourism," Benos said.

"It's not just the restoration of the monuments but their assimilation into daily life as areas of cultural activity."

For Deilakis, the effort will "make people's connection with the past something perceptible."

She has dedicated the past 26 years to unearthing the small Epidhavros theater.

Until 1970, it was not known that this port had a second theater until Deilakis, convinced it was there, decided to ignore her superiors and begin digging in 1972.

Student questions Cassandra's advice on tobacco usage and it's effects on health

Dear Cassandra,

This letter is in regard to the Dear Cassie article in the Oct. 1 issue of the Collegian about chewing tobacco.

First, let me say that I am not condoning the use of tobacco or saying that it is OK.

The fact is, I have been chewing for some years now. I wish now that I had never started because the cost of this habit is getting high.

Even the $1.20 I spend a week (for the cheap stuff) is more than enough.

The reason I have continued is that I have had no adverse effects from chewing.

Believe it or not, I have never had even so much as a cavity. I simply enjoy the taste.

The reason this article bothered me so much, is the tone in which 'Cassie' replies to the 'Disgusted.' She sets the stereotypical picture of all those who chew as disgusting, slobbering, ill-mannered stupid fools.

Granted, those individuals that do spit on the sidewalk or a place of heavy traffic need some lessons in manners and respect, but this does not include everyone that chews or smokes.

When I do have to spit in public, I always find a trash can or the underside of a bush, which I never miss because I have had a lot of practice.

'Disgusted' stated that seeing this disgusts her more than anything else.

I'll tell you something, I think that the way some students dress on this campus is much more offensive than seeing anybody spit on the ground.

Every day, I see people trying to imitate fishing bait by poking holes all over their body so they can hang jewelry every where.

And it's OK, because they are being 'themselves', or it's a 'fashion statement.'

Now, I'm not saying they have poor judgment or that they are stupid. They can do what they want. But this is exactly the same type of disturbance that you described. Whether the residue is stuck on your shoe, or in your memory, it's all the same.

William Henry
Senior, Electrical Engineering

P.S. You may print this response if you like. My intention is for 'Cassie' to read this and reflect on herself before she writes.

Dear William,

Thank you for your insights. Having read your letter, I realize I made some errors in judgment when I wrote my last column.

I think I spent too little time on the effect smoking can have on intelligence.

I am glad the cheap stuff hasn't given you cavities, but if you think you can honestly say you have had no adverse effects from chewing, you have more to learn than just how to direct your spit.

Cancer doesn't just show up at your regularly scheduled dental visit like a cavity.

And if you think having no problems now means you'll be OK for life, call the Los Angeles Dodgers clubhouse and ask for Bret Butler.

I am glad you spit in the trash or the bushes, and I do appreciate your comments about body piercing.

I had never thought of the "fishing bait" analogy, but I like it. Therefore, as I did last week, I offer a suggestion:

Next time you see someone with a piece of metal sticking out of his/her lip, belly button, nose, whatever, cover it up — with your spit. You are obviously proud of your spitting ability, and I am confident you can hit a naval at 20 paces.

Write soon, and happy hunting.

Strumming strings, flittering flutes to bring K-State orchestra season to life in McCain

SPEED

▶ K-State Orchestra's premiere performance is at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium. Three faculty members will be featured soloists.

PORTIA SISCO
arts & entertainment editor

The premiere performance of the K-State Orchestra will begin at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The orchestra will perform four classical selections.

David Littrell, conductor for the K-State Orchestra, said it is more prepared this early in the year than any other orchestra in years past, Littrell said.

"It takes a while to start to gel," Littrell said. "There are some really strong players and leaders."

The first half of the concert will highlight "Orpheus," by Franz Liszt; "Five Pieces for String Orchestra," by Paul Hindemith; and "Cockaigne Overture (In London Town)" by Edward Elgar.

"I try to provide a wide variety of musical literature," Littrell said. "Something that's not too hard and not too easy."

The orchestra is made up of musicians of different levels and years, including non-traditional students and Manhattan residents. Some of the students aren't even music majors, Littrell said.

Musicians who are not students still attend practices regularly.

The "Cockaigne Overture" is a depiction of London in the early 1900s.

It will give the brass, trumpet, trombone and tuba a chance to shine, Littrell said.

"Orpheus" will feature a violin solo by Miranda Boettcher, junior in business administration.

"I like the Orpheus a lot," Boettcher said. "It's the one that came together first."

Boettcher has played with the orchestra for three years. She is the concert master this year.

"I think we've always been pretty good, but we have gotten better. The rehearsals have gone smoothly. The overall ability is higher," Boettcher said.

The second half of the concert will be devoted to the "Triple Concerto," by Ludwig van Beethoven.

Three faculty members will play the featured solos in this selection.

Cora Cooper, violinist; David Littrell, cellist; and Joseph Brumbeloe, pianist, are all professors of music at K-State.

"The Beethoven shows off the talent of our teachers," Boettcher said.

Cooper, Brumbeloe and Littrell also perform as a trio in a faculty concert annually.

"Triple Concerto" will bring the trio together again with the orchestra.

"It's interesting," Cooper said. "A lot of times we're playing together as a trio."

Internship requirement sends students searching for food-service experience

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

Requirements to complete internships send many students searching across Kansas and throughout the United States. Dietetics students, however, have the opportunity to intern on campus.

Deborah Canter, program director of coordinated programs in dietetics, said students are interning in numerous operations on campus and in Manhattan.

Seniors in dietetics must complete a 900-hour intern experience as part of their curriculum. Senior interns work in management during the first semester and in a clinical setting during the second semester.

Some locations for this semester's management experience are the K-State Student Union, residence-hall dining centers, the Manhattan-Ogden USD 383, Mercy Health Center, Smith Scholarship House and Smurthwaite House.

"We like to think of these people not as students, but as professionals. We incorporate them into the management team of whatever facility they are in," Canter said.

Students work an average of 30-35 hours a week to maintain credit for the internship. Interns work with a registered dietitian in those areas to learn and experience management practice.

"They have responsibility to make sure the operation is functioning appropriately, taking care of customers and really learning what it takes to make a business run and keep people happy," Canter said.

Jennifer Appelhanz, senior in dietetics, said she shadows the dietitian at the Union. Appelhanz is assigned to the pizza and dessert areas of the Stateroom cafeteria and is in charge of the employees in those areas. She also works on menu pricing, catering events, production sheets and special projects.

"We have had a lot of comments on vegetarian items," she said. One of her tasks will be incorporating those items into the hot food lines.

Jody Koehn, senior in dietetics, is completing her management semester in the Bluemont Room in the Union. Koehn said she is responsible for setting up the room, having it ready for timely service, making orders and managing employees. "I supervise everything," she said.

Koehn is also responsible for evaluating foods by texture, taste, looks and presentation. She described the internship as a broad learning experience because she also works with food pricing, marketing, and creating profit-loss statements.

"The experience teaches you problem solving, critical thinking and puts everything you've learned to work," she said.

Vicki Clark, senior in dietetics, is doing her internship in the Kramer Food Center. "At Kramer, we get a full coverage of management because it is such a big place," she said.

Having worked in food service before, Clark said the transition from worker to manager was challenging because she often wants to get involved in the hands-on work.

For her internship, she is now working with production, helping the cooks. The production portion is a five-week step, which follows the four-week service section.

Clark said during the service portion of the internship, she managed student workers and the service of food.

Also included in her plan will be five weeks working with sanitation and two weeks in menu and purchasing. Clark said the dietitian at Kramer puts interns in charge of projects for each section.

Three students are, however, completing their internship requirements off campus and out of Manhattan.

The Department of Hotel, Restaurant, Institution Management and Dietetics teaches over the Internet and by distance video conferencing.

"Those three individuals who are off campus take the lecture part of their training over the video conference system," Canter said.

During the second semester of their senior years, dietetics interns go off campus to a hospital facility for clinical experience.

Canter said students again work with dietitians to provide nutrition care for hospitalized patients or out-patient clinics and in community health and public health settings.

North Koreans starving; pleas for help ignored

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEOUL, South Korea — About 1,000 North Koreans a day are believed to be dying from starvation, South Korea's president said Monday.

Even the most privileged military are facing the deepened food shortage in North Korea, President Kim Young-sam told a meeting of government and opposition party heads.

Two years of severe flooding that destroyed crops and farmland brought on the communist nation's food crisis. International Red Cross officials working in North Korea have reported severe shortages.

World Food Program spokeswoman Laura Boldrini, speaking in Rome, said Monday she believed Kim's figures were "a bit exaggerated."

"But the situation there is extremely critical," she said. Boldrini would not give an estimate of how many North Koreans starve each day.

The North has appealed for international help to feed its 24 million people but its appeal has been largely rebuffed because of its hard-line policies. Reportedly, the North does not have enough money to buy food.

South Korea granted a small amount of humanitarian aid, but it was cut off after a North Korean submarine stranded itself off South Korea's eastern coast.

South Korea claims the submarine was on a spy mission. North Korea insists it was on a training mission and had engine trouble.

About 40,000 tons of food aid arrived in North Korea in August and September, donated by international aid groups including the United Nations World Food Program and the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies.

The United States donated $6.2 million to help the World Food Program buy food. On Monday, State Department spokesman Nicholas Burns said the United States had no plans to increase food aid to North Korea, but would consider appeals from humanitarian groups.

Ambassadors wanted: must be outgoing, active, knowledgeable

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

K-State Ambassadors represent K-State with communication to the students who have already left and the students yet to come, K-State Ambassador Matt Urbanek, senior in economics and finance, said.

Urbanek said as an ambassador of the University he is responsible for functions with the student body and alumni.

K-State Ambassadors are also members of the Student Alumni Board, an organization helping with alumni events and recruitment for K-State.

John White, director of alumni clubs, said the application process for ambassadors is approaching.

"We are looking for people very knowledgeable about the University as a whole. This will come from involvement with different organizations on campus," White said.

He said after completing an application all applicants are given an interview before a student panel. After advancing past the first interview, a faculty and staff panel interview the finalists.

The student body determines the final ambassadors by election. Elections are coordinated by the Student Governing Association and SAB.

"The selection process is properly stringent. A person's communication skills and knowledge have to be proficient. It is challenging," Urbanek said.

White said three to four men and the same number of women are chosen for elections. One man and one woman are always selected to be ambassadors.

"It is a great opportunity to get to travel and meet alumni and potential students around the state of Kansas," White said.

Mariah Tanner, senior in general human ecology and K-State ambassador, said she enjoys talking to students and helping them to find their homes in K-State.

Tanner said many alumni talk about some of the strong qualities K-State had when they were at the University. Tanner said many of these same qualities, such as good work ethic, still exist today.

Applications are available on Oct. 14 and are due Oct. 25. Applications are available at the Office of Student Activities and Services and the KSU Alumni Association office. Elections will be Nov. 20-22 in the K-State Student Union. The final ambassadors will be announced at halftime of the homecoming football game against Iowa State, Nov. 23.

Months of work remain after Flight 800 pieces collected

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. — The Navy is nearly ready to pack up its scuba gear and underwater robots, leaving the mystery of TWA flight 800 to an investigative army hunting a solution with microscopes and computers.

"It's definitely the beginning of a new phase once we get all the pieces up from the ocean," said FBI Assistant Director James Kallstrom, the agency's lead investigator.

"But nothing much will change. There just won't be things coming in the front door anymore," he said. "We will be concentrating on what is already there in the hangar."

On Monday, the aircraft hangar in Calverton contained more than 90 percent of the pieces of the Boeing 747, which exploded July 17, killing all 230 aboard. Authorities still don't know whether a bomb, missile or mechanical malfunction caused the explosion that spread wreckage like confetti across five square miles of the bottom of the Atlantic Ocean.

Two Navy boats, with 100 divers and 450 members conducting the salvage operation, are expected to leave within two weeks, Rear Admiral Edward Kristensen said.

Some Navy personnel will remain to supervise the vacuuming or dredging of the ocean floor, which will be contracted out to private companies.

If a cause still hasn't been determined by the time the boats leave, thousands of pieces of debris must undergo a closer inspection and be added to the three-dimensional mockup of the plane being assembled in the hangar.

Investigators are still missing key pieces.

The FBI is seeking any metal that would have surrounded a hole created by a bomb or missile. And the National Transportation Safety Board is eager to find a missing fuel pump and six missing fuel probes, which could, theoretically, have sparked the explosion in the center fuel tank. The NTSB also wants more of the center fuel tank, about two-thirds of which has been found.

As metal and aluminum fragments arrive at the hangar, they are immediately viewed by FBI forensic experts for unusual pitting or scarring. Then they are placed under high-powered microscopes to determine if they have come in contact with an explosive.

Bomb-sniffing dogs regularly check the debris. Softer materials such as seating and insulation are vacuumed with special sweepers that contain filters to catch the smallest materials, then tested for traces of specific explosives.

ISRAEL

Monday's talks. "We are not asking Israel for handouts. What we want is the implementation of the agreement on the ground."

In his speech to parliament, Netanyahu repeated his earlier insistence that Israel would not remove its troops without security guarantees for the settlers.

"We intend to implement the redeployment in Hebron.... We are committed to the agreements signed by the previous government," Netanyahu said. "But a government is committed first to the safety of its citizens. Our challenge is to combine the two."

U.S. envoy Dennis Ross, who is sitting in on the latest talks, issued a statement saying Monday's meetings were serious and businesslike. Israel TV said the talks adjourned with the Palestinians agreeing to discuss Israel's security demands.

An Israeli official said President Bill Clinton had let both sides know at last week's summit in Washington that he expected results within 45 days.

Earlier Monday, visiting Secretary of State Warren Christopher met with Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy and said he was assured Israel would not try to modify the peace agreements it has already signed.

But his comments did not address whether the security demands would require changes in the agreements — as the Palestinians insisted — or simply adjustments in the way they are implemented, as Israel said.

Israel, meanwhile, eased its grip on the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

On Sunday, it ended a 10-day curfew on Hebron, pulled its tanks back from some Palestinian areas and restored freedom of movement for Palestinians in Gaza and much of the West Bank.

On Monday, about 2,000 Palestinian workers were allowed to return to their jobs at an industrial park in the northern Gaza Strip, and 700 more were given permits to enter Israel to help with the olive harvest.

But virtually all 2 million Palestinians remain barred from entering Israel, as they have been since Feb. 25, when Islamic militants conducted the first in a series of four suicide bombings in Israel.

Netanyahu said Monday if security improved, he would gradually ease the restrictions, and let thousands of Palestinian workers return to jobs in Israel.

Before the closures, over 100,000 Palestinians worked in the Jewish state.

Fundraiser to aid graduate's family after heart failure

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

A barbecue fundraiser and donation funds have been scheduled and set up for a former K-State graduate who recently suffered heart failure giving birth to twins.

Paige McCarthy, 31, gave birth to twin girls, Sept. 15 at Mercy Health Center. One of the baby girls was born with a heart defect and transferred to Storemont Vail Hospital in Topeka. The other baby, who is doing fine, remained at Mercy Health Center.

On Sept. 22, McCarthy had sudden heart failure and was transferred to St. Louis University Hospital in St. Louis.

McCarthy was scheduled Sept. 23 for triple-bypass heart surgery in St. Louis and was on the waiting list for a possible heart transplant.

McCarthy did not end up having a transplant, because her condition improved.

Thursday, the reports were positive for the babies and for McCarthy.

"Right now, the doctors are doing exploratory surgery on Paige, and she seems to be doing better," Lori Harwood, a friend of the family, said. "Paige is taking heart medication, and the baby in Topeka is still in critical condition, but she is taking heart medication and doing a lot better, too."

On the way to St. Louis, McCarthy had regained a lost heartbeat but in the process had suffered a stroke as well.

"When they were on the way to St. Louis, Paige had

Senators allocate funds to groups registered by UAB

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate passed its first batch of allocations to campus organizations Thursday night with $91,585 at its disposal.

Previous Senates have never spent more than $35,000, and Allocations Chairperson Bret Glendening said he expected total allocations to be around $30,000 this semester.

As the Senate began the discussion of the second-reading allocations, an amendment brought it to the attention of Senate Chair Aubrey Abbott that there was no provision in the new funding regulations allowing exceptions.

After a three-minute recess, the Senate passed a quickly drafted amendment to the regulations allowing exceptions with a two-thirds vote.

"The reason that we are doing this is so that we can give groups consideration," Glendening said. "This was an oversight on the part of the Allocations Committee and a big one at that."

After a lengthy explanation of the provisions of this new amendment, Faculty Representative Bill Muir reminded Abbott that before the new provision could affect the night's allocations, Student Body President Chris Hansen would have to sign the amendment.

Because Hansen was not there, the Senate passed over allocations that had amendments which proposed calling for exceptions.

New organization works to improve students' speech skills

■ Toastmasters provide communication resources for student and faculty members.

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

The K-State Powercat Masters Toastmasters Club met Tuesday night to have its charter banquet in the Flint Hills Room at the K-State Student Union.

"According to the list book, what is it that people fear most? Not death, not dying, but public speaking. We're here to prove the list wrong," Tom Roberts, distinguished toastmaster, said.

The club is built on the idea of helping students increase their speech, leadership and listening skills.

Although the club was originally brought together to help engineering students with their speaking capabilities, students from any of the colleges on campus are welcome to join.

Hopefully, it will encourage other colleges to form their own. In fact, plans for the College of Business Administration to organize its own toastmasters' club are presently in the works, Roberts said.

The club is also for faculty and staff members.

"It is their chance to help improve their own skills as well," Jon Beall, senior in electrical and computer engineering and president of the club, said.

Regular meetings consist of a series of speeches by members, table-topic sessions and evaluations. The table-topic sessions are designed to help members to think on their feet.

"There are three benefits of being in Toastmasters: first, improvement of communication skills; second, the resources it provides to improve your communication skills; and third, leadership," said Rob Zienkewicz, senior in electrical engineering and vice president of membership.

The speeches are lined out for students in their manuals. New members are also assigned a mentor so they know what's going on, Beall said. They will have to complete 10 organized speeches to achieve certain Toastmasters status.

The first status, competent toastmaster, is attainable for some students while they are still in college.

To achieve advanced-toastmaster and distinguished-toastmaster status, students must continue that path once they are in the industry, Beall said.

"Toastmasters is an international organization, and many Fortune 500 companies have these clubs and meet over lunches," Beall said.

The club has 19 members and is welcoming any newcomers.

Powercat Toastmasters meet at 4:45 p.m. every Tuesday in Durland 129.

KAREN RUCHERT president of College Republicans, and Jason Dechant, president of Young Democrats, discuss immigration and education of immigrants Tuesday night in the K-State Student Union. HALO invited the leaders of both the Young Democrats and College Republicans to debate with each other about political hot topics.

Republicans and Democrats debate immigration

STORY BY CHAD HELIN

Democrats and Republicans agreed on problems of immigration and education Tuesday, but not methods of solving them.

The Hispanic American Leadership Organization invited leaders from the College Republicans and the Young Democrats to debate Latino issues and the 1996 election.

"The Democratic Party is in full support of immigration," Jason Dechant, president of the Young Democrats, said. "Immigrants are citizens just like us, and they shouldn't have to give up any of their heritage."

Karen Ruckert, president of the College Republicans, said her party also favors legal immigration.

Dechant, however, said Republicans such as Pat Buchanan, whom he termed radical, are xenophobic, meaning they fear foreign things.

"Buchanan would like to build a wall around the country and not let anyone else in," Dechant, junior in political science, said.

Ruckert said Buchanan is an extreme case and shouldn't be used as a measuring stick for the entire party.

"Pat Buchanan wasn't even allowed to speak at the national convention," Ruckert, junior in history and political science, said.

Dechant said curbing services, improving border patrol and encouraging immigrants to seek legal status are all things the United States can do to improve the situation.

HALO members raised the point that many illegal immigrants pay taxes but don't receive services supported by their tax money.

"If someone is paying taxes, they should reap the benefits," Dechant said. "This problem lies more in big businesses that hire illegal immigrants, not so much the government."

Dechant and Ruckert took different positions on education.

Dechant pointed out the Republicans' plan to cut the Department of Education.

"How can the Republicans say that they are for education when they want to cut the federal department that oversees its activities?" he asked.

However, Ruckert used this argument to explain Republicans think the Department of Education is just bureaucracy that doesn't accomplish its purpose.

"By cutting this department, the government could hand that money down to the state level and let them make the decisions," she said.

NATION WORLD

• NOBEL ECONOMICS PRIZE AWARDED. An American economist with unorthodox ideas — among them that "it's insane to try to balance the budget" — shared the Nobel economics prize Tuesday with a British professor. William Vickrey, professor emeritus at Columbia University, and James Mirrlees of Cambridge University in England were cited for explaining how governments as well as consumers use incomplete data to make decisions.

• TROPICAL STORM JOSEPHINE. Tropical Storm Josephine never quite made it to hurricane status but still managed to leave behind a waterlogged and windswept mess as it raced up the East Coast Tuesday. Only one fatality was reported. A 72-year-old woman in southwest Georgia was killed Tuesday morning when her car struck a tree downed by the storm.

• POPE'S OPERATION SUCCESSFUL. Pope John Paul II underwent a successful operation Tuesday to remove his inflamed appendix, a condition the Vatican has blamed for his recent health problems. The operation went well and without complications.

The ANSA and AGI agencies said the pope was back in his 10th-floor hospital suite by 9:30 a.m. after about two hours of surgery. The Vatican said a medical bulletin later Tuesday would give more details. The appendectomy was John Paul's sixth operation since he was shot in the stomach by a would-be assassin in 1981.

• RARE TYPE OF AIDS VIRUS IN U.S. When France first sounded the alarm in 1994 that an exotic, hard-to-diagnose strain of AIDS was spreading, doctors here were not too worried — until they found the first U.S. case in July.

Just three months later, scientists said the AIDS epidemic is far more diverse than they had realized. Researchers have uncovered a second U.S. resident infected with this rare type of HIV named Group O, as well as some New Yorkers with signs of still different AIDS strains never before seen in this country.

The findings sent federal doctors scouring the globe for viral strains to ensure that U.S. AIDS tests are good enough to catch every type.

• YELLOW FEVER IN AFRICA. Yellow fever is making an alarming comeback in sub-Saharan Africa, prompting medical officials to appeal for $190 million to control the disease that causes high fevers, vomiting and death.

A study in Wednesday's Journal of the American Medical Association found 18,735 yellow fever cases worldwide — including 4,522 deaths — from 1987 to 1991. It said this was the highest incidence of the disease since 1948.

• IRA CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY IN LATEST ATTACK. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility Tuesday for the double car-bomb attack on the British army's headquarters here, which wounded 31 and brought Northern Ireland back to the brink of conflict.

It was the outlawed group's first bomb attack in Northern Ireland since mid-1994. In February, it broke a 17-month cease-fire with a deadly bombing in London; attacks followed elsewhere in Britain and on a British army base in Germany.

A telephone caller using a verified codeword said to RTE, the Irish national broadcasters in Dublin, that the IRA committed Monday's strike inside Thiepval Barracks, heart of the 18,000-strong military presence in the British-ruled province.

• STUDENT RETURNS TO SCHOOL AFTER GIVING MIDOL TO CLASSMATE. An eighth-grade honor student expelled for giving a Midol pill to a classmate returned to school Tuesday in a white limousine, her punishment reduced to the days she had already missed.

The student was allowed to return to the school about 10 miles northeast of Dayton after the school board decided late Monday to reduce her 80-day expulsion to the three days she had already served. The board upheld a 10-day suspension she had already served.

The student was expelled after she took two Midol pills from the school nurse's office Sept. 6 and gave one to Erica Taylor. Taylor, who said she didn't take the pill, was allowed to return to school following a nine-day suspension after she agreed to take part in a drug evaluation and counseling program.

• RAINFOREST LECTURE. Peter H. Herlihy, will present a lecture titled "Indigenous Peoples and Rain Forest Conservation in Central America." Herlihy, a cultural geographer from the University of Kansas, will present his lecture Thursdayat 3:30 p.m., in Dickens 206. Herlihy's most recent research involves mapping to document population of the land use of tropical rain forest peoples.

• MURRAY A TRUSTEE AT MENNINGER. John P. Murray, professor and director of the School of Family Studies and Human Services at K-State, was elected a Trustee of Menninger Sept. 27. Menninger, the only national center for prevention and treatment of mental illness, mental health education and research, has trustees in 25 states. Murray has written several books on about television in society and is involved in studies mapping brains of children viewing media violence.

• GINGRICH IN KANSAS. House Speaker Newt Gingrich will make an appearance Friday with Vince Snowbarger, the Republican nominee for Congress in the Third District. Gingrich plans stops Thursday in Springfield and Clayton, Mo., winding up the day in Kansas City, Mo.

• ALTERNATIVE SCHOOLS. Students who get into trouble at school or drop out have an alternative. School officials from Hutchinson, Galena, Olathe and Wichita appeared before the Kansas State Board of Education on Tuesday to talk about alternative schools. They explained how districts provide services to students who have dropped out, are at risk of dropping out, or have been disruptive at other schools.

Actors tackle Chekhov in new play

History will be made when K-State Theatre opens the season with "Uncle Vanya" by Anton Chekhov.

The play will open at 8 tonight in Nichols Theatre. It will run through Saturday and then again Oct. 17-19.

K-State Theatre has never performed a Chekhov play before.

"It's a big risk," Director Charlotte Macfarland said. "A lot of academic theaters run away from it because it is so hard."

Chekhov's plays involve older characters and have many subtle ironies and transitions that challenge both the director and actors, Macfarland said.

"You really have to do a lot of actor's work to find them," Dan Shea, graduate student in theater, said. "If not, it will come off as 'What's happening? Nothing is happening.'"

Shea said much of the play is subtextual.

"Psychological obstacles are much harder to play as an actor," he said.

Macfarland has led cast discussions, coached actors individually and worked on improvisation skills to help actors develop and understand their roles.

The play centers around the inner struggles of Vanya and his family. They have dedicated their lives to Vanya's brother-in-law,

HALO

Many HALO members wanted to know whether the state or federal level would do a better job of implementing bilingual education into schools.

Ruckert said by giving the decision-making power to local levels, results would be better for individual communities.

"The federal government can't make blanket decisions that will affect everyone. It's just not realistic," she said. "You can't tell me that things in New York City are the same as those in Topeka, Kansas."

Dechant said unless the federal government takes control, many issues such as bilingual education won't ever get addressed.

The debate was arranged to help inform HALO members where the parties stand on issues that will affect Hispanic Americans, Wilfrido Torres, HALO president, said.

"Everyone in the club is now registered to vote," Torres said. "I want them to be able to make intelligent decisions."

▶ KSU RODEO TEAM

Program helps find home for cowboys

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

The bull rider hits the ground with a sickening crunch. He hobbles out of the arena and nurses his broken arm. Now what? No way home, no money, no idea where to get help, and he is frustrated.

This is a dilemma facing many members of the K-State Rodeo Team, especially the transfer students. It is being addressed by the team in the form of a new program called Adopt-a-Cowboy/Cowgirl.

Area families are encouraged to adopt a rodeo-team member to provide them with a family environment, kind of a home away from home.

"When students go off to college, the sense of family is lost. There isn't the support that has been there," said Char Henton, secretary of the Kaw Valley Rodeo Association.

Henton said the program is a good way to develop this system.

Rodeo team members are adopted not only for family support, but for advice. A family can provide recommendations of local doctors, mechanics and veterinary care, as well as friendship.

"It gives them somebody to talk to away from home," Steve Frazier, K-State Rodeo Team coach, said.

The program was previously utilized years ago by the K-State football team. However, the NCAA gave the program a thumbs-down because it thought it was like buying favors for the players, Henton said.

The National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association has given the K-State Rodeo Team permission to implement the program here, said Frazier.

The program is new, having just been described to rodeo families at a spaghetti supper about two weeks ago.

"It was well received by people in common as well as the cowboys and cowgirls themselves," Frazier said.

There are over 20 cowboys and cowgirls who need families to count on. They would love to call someone mom or dad.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

K-State is full of opportunities to broaden cultural awareness

K-State is full of diversity.

Stop laughing.

Really, considering our location in the country and the fact that this is considered a conservative campus, we have a fair amount of diversity.

WHY WE CARE

You don't have to wait until awareness week to celebrate other cultures. Cultural diversity is all around us at K-State.

Maybe we're not as eclectic as the University of Kansas, but you've got to admit that we hold our own in the diversity department.

You might have noticed the onslaught of awareness months, weeks and days. This is good stuff.

Last week we had Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week. There is much more going on this week.

This week is the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society's Coming Out Week and National Coming Out Day is Oct. 11.

The Tiawanese National Day celebration is Wednesday, and the Tiawanese Film Festival in the K-State Student Union will begin Wednesday and continue for a week.

October is also Hispanic Heritage Month. Speeches, art exhibits and much more are offered on campus in celebration of the Hispanic culture.

We should all take advantage of these celebrations and events. They are more than just lip service.

They represent an opportunity for all of us to better understand the various cultures and viewpoints that are represented at K-State.

But these events aren't only apparent during the official months, weeks and days. There is ethnic diversity available to all of us all year round.

The Union Program Council Kaleidoscope Committee always shows foreign films. Granted, they're not free, but they only cost $1.75. This is a small price to pay to improve your mind and gain understanding of the world.

There are speakers of cultural and ethnic diversity on campus frequently.

There are so many things going on around us day in and day out that we should not wait to learn about other viewpoints of the world until the calendar says it's awareness week.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at karolyi@ksu.edu.

Looking for a dose of culture? Become a Beach Bum

MY

Russell FORTMEYER

Students will get something for nothing starting Sunday.

A free ride, you say? The "man" is going to give us something?

That's right, bucko. Beginning this Sunday, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is open to the public.

Although, unless you want to see the ribbon-cutting ceremony or just gawk at the goings-on, I'd avoid the long lines and cramped quarters of the galleries until next week, when it's bound to settle down.

Once you've seen the art and the new museum, you'll undoubtedly want to get involved. It might be nice to know exactly what you're getting yourself involved with.

Since you lucked out and happen to be attending K-State when its new art museum opens, you've got the chance to become a charter member of a brand new arts-oriented student organization.

Maybe you've seen our signs hanging around campus: "Who are the Beach Bums?," "Where do the Beach Bums hang out?," etc. Pretty catchy campaign, no? Are you still guessing?

The Beach Bums is the newly minted student support and activity group of the Beach art museum. It's akin to the long-standing, adult-slanted Friends of Art organization formed in the 1930s, but only K-State students are invited to join.

You needn't be able to quote Kandinsky, recognize a Pollock (that's hard!), or wear all black and drink espresso. Although, we're not saying you can't, either.

It's important for the Bums to consist of a diverse cross section of campus life, not just the art majors and such. The Beach art museum will fail if the entire student population doesn't support its programming and mission.

Like most places and things at K-State, the art museum is a friendly, laid-back joint with no dress code or admission fee. It's a new place for everyone to hang out, meet friends or be seen.

The Bums is basically a group of students who want to meet throughout the year.

As part of the Bums' programming, you'll get a newsletter, a 10-percent discount at the museum bookstore, special tours and programs by museum staff and visiting artists, and a yearly gala. The Bums will also push one significant fundraising campaign a year to support museum programs.

There will undoubtedly be other activities planned — maybe art-related day trips or coffee groups. If you've got a great idea for an activity, let them know when you join.

Most of all, the Bums is a group bent on getting people together. It is the 1990s and networking isn't a dirty word yet.

This week, you'll see more signs go up with information on how to join. Or maybe one of the members of the Bums steering committee has visited your organization or living group to tell you more about it.

> "Like most places and things at K-State, the art museum is a friendly, laid-back joint with no dress code or admission fee. It's a new place for everyone to hang out, meet friends or be seen."

If you want to get involved now, find an application, join up and then enter the logo contest. They're looking for an interesting, artistically-appealing logo for the Bums that includes the Beach art museum's signature arch design.

Don't be afraid to teeter on the edge of outrageousness, but remember the design should be enduring (this means no allusions to the Macarena — I'm so sorry for even bringing that up) and in good taste.

Just fill out the Bums application, cut a check for the $10 membership fee, and send it with your logo entry to Kathrine Walker, education coordinator, Beach Museum of Art, Kansas State University, 701 Beach Lane, Manhattan, Ks., 66506, or you can drop it off at the museum office. Either way, entries must be received by Nov. 15.

If your logo is the lucky entry, you'll win a $20-gift certificate to the museum Shop, which includes books, shirts and other fine items.

Whether or not you enter the contest, remember to join the Beach Bums today so you can begin to enjoy the benefits and help support the arts in Manhattan.

Get some sun. Ride the waves. See you at the Beach.

Russell Fortmeyer is senior in architectural engineering. You can reach him by e-mail at (rmf@ksu.edu).

Nightmares with my eyes wide open

MY

Page GETZ

I am a troubled woman.

Just so there's no question about it. I'm troubled, and I can't sleep.

I've always been troubled. In fact I was an insomniac before I knew how to spell insomnia. And people who aren't sufficiently troubled scare me.

I'm so troubled that instead of writing what could be the first Pulitzer Prize-winning column from a college newspaper, I can't help but bitch randomly about how troubled I am.

When I'm not sleeping, I'm thinking about how we spend our whole lives dying, from the moment we come out kicking and screaming. Then there are years of training and developing a civilized and eloquent evolution of this kicking and screaming.

If we're lucky we make a pilgrimage to Walt Disney World, catch the Grand Canyon between dust storms and fog, visit the mighty Trump Castle Casino Resort or are remembered as the prom queen, the football star, the guy every one tried to impress, or that really smart one.

What was her name?

We dress up as Santa for the kids. We learn to do the YMCA or the Macarena. We aspire for walk-in closets, promotions (fewer asses to kiss), paid vacations, to outlive our mortgages, the diet that works, the husband that doesn't beat us, the wife with good child-bearing hips, but no stretch marks, season tickets, etc.

These are the images I get when I think of the American dream. But when I think of America, I see Avon ladies going from cardboard box to cardboard box selling the American pipe dream, one fantasy at a time.

I find it offensive to listen to politicians debate about family values, because I don't see their idea of family values having anything to do with most families.

I'm waiting for the day we discover the new Norm-man Rockwell painting a billboard between a used car lot and the unemployment office, depicting the panic of a mother who realizes the welfare check isn't going to cover it, or the all-American boy jacking off to a magazine with men whipping women chained and blindfolded.

I think of Superman in a wheel chair, Lois Lane in the psych ward, Papa Brady dying of AIDS, and the Marlboro man on life support.

I wonder who will be the celebrity pall bearers at the funerals of Madonna, Johnny Carson or Heidi Fleiss.

I think of my great grandfather at the age of five, watching his family be massacred by Russian soldiers because they were Jewish. I wonder what they did with the bodies. I wonder if he had trouble sleeping.

I think of all the obituaries I had to write for my news and feature writing class last semester. They weren't even real people, and I cried every time I had to write one anyway.

I think of a geology class I took. The professor said there was going to be an earthquake in the United States that would wipe out the entire country anytime between now and a million years from now. No one in the class even flinched.

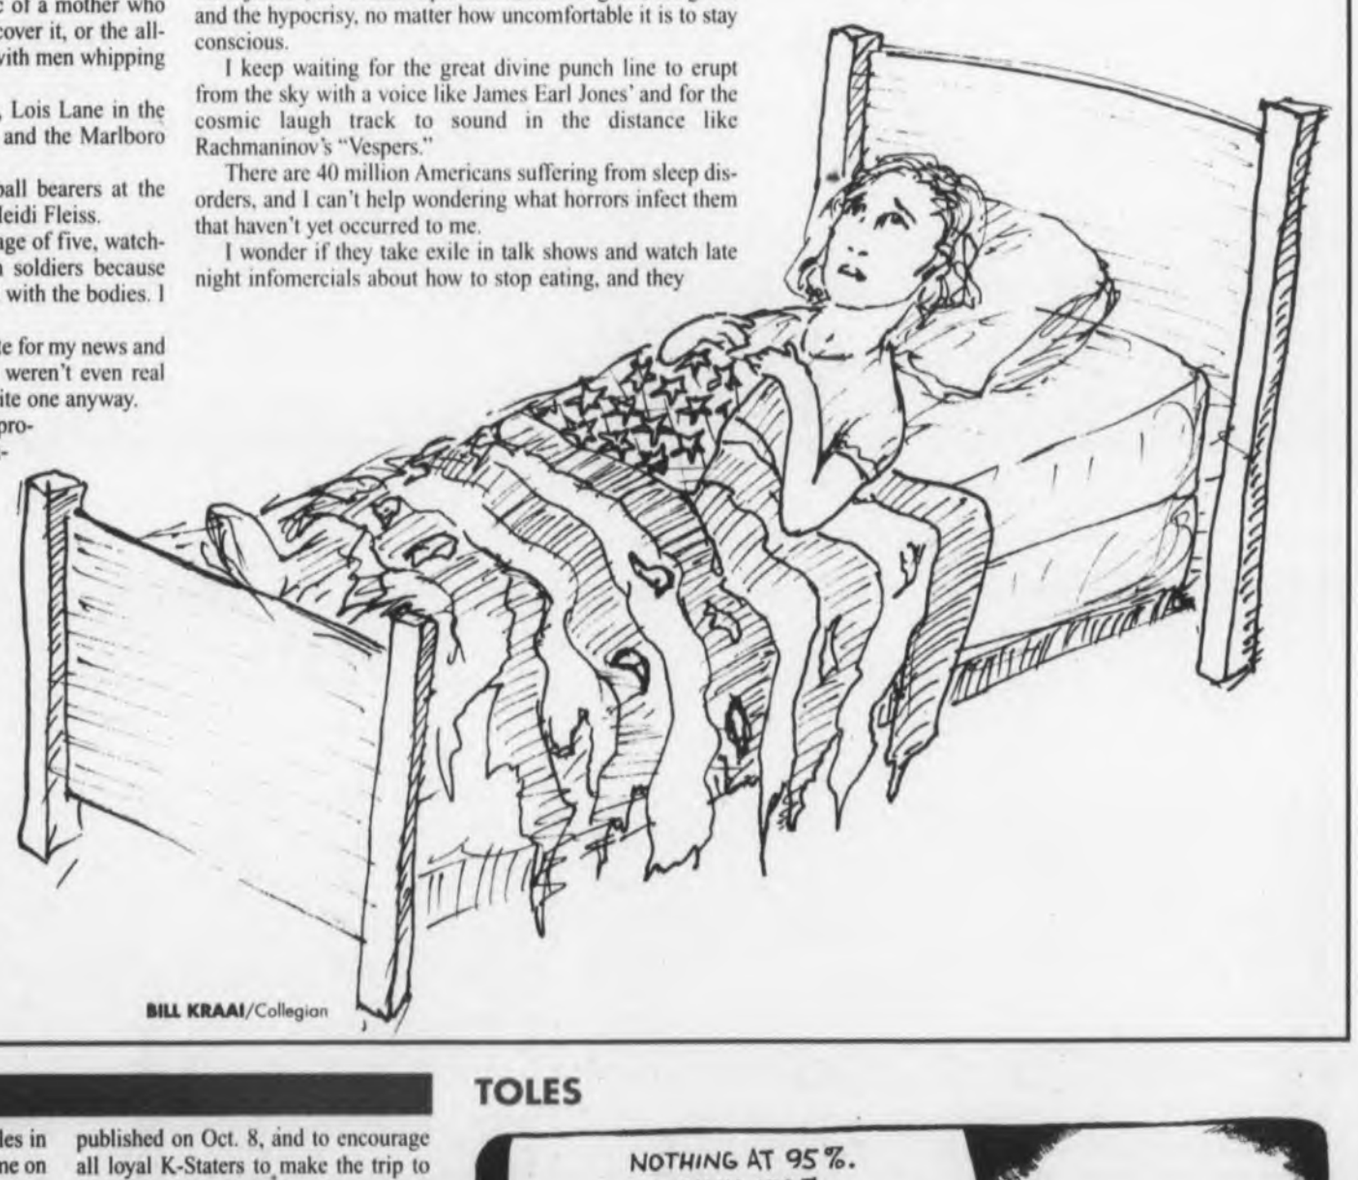
Every night for weeks I pictured South American villages suffocating in snow, crushed by the walls of their own homes and the faces of families hovering in corners together in the shadow of the fire and ashes of Mount Vesuvius closing in.

Somewhere between asleep and not, I hear an argument between two hit men I saw on "Geraldo" months ago. One man said that he would kill even children for the right price. The other hit man thought that was immoral and irrational. He only kills adults. And the producers went to such a length to prove that these geys were the real thing — genuine hit men.

It isn't so disturbing that there are people making a living off the killing. That is an old tradition. What is disturbing is the society that produces such a subtle hysteria of unmet needs and desperation that it manufactures this industry, as well as the industry of the kind of voyeurism that creates a market for these shows.

Of course I'm troubled. I might be Buddhist, but I'm not Buddha.

I can see a cosmic network operating beneath the insanity, but I would rather be troubled than to choose not to see the injustice, the brutal exploitation, the slaughter, the greed and the hypocrisy, no matter how uncomfortable it is to stay conscious.



I keep waiting for the great divine punch line to erupt from the sky with a voice like James Earl Jones' and for the cosmic laugh track to sound in the distance like Rachmaninov's "Vespers."

There are 40 million Americans suffering from sleep disorders, and I can't help wondering what horrors infect them that haven't yet occurred to me.

I wonder if they take exile in talk shows and watch late night infomercials about how to stop eating, and they can't even afford to eat. And as the hours tiptoe by me, I picture the living skeletons with only flies blanketing them from the desert frost.

And I wonder if they are sleeping.

Fans didn't show enough support at Nebraska game

Editor,

Here are some thoughts on the Nebraska/K-State football game from an alumna who was here when that kind of game was the norm rather than the exception.

My compliments to Frank Tracz and the Pride; the precision marching drill at halftime was awesome. Please don't take the guarded applause as an indicator of your performance, the crowd was just a little numb from the first half of the football game. I'm probably a little prejudice since my daughter is a band member. This also gives me a first hand awareness of the B,S & T (that is blood, sweat and tears as in the music group and the effort for those of you not from my generation) that goes into each performance. You are an integral part of the the spirit of K-State. Congrats and keep that "Wabash Cannonball" coming, even if it is a lip splitter. You will play "Happy Trails" again.

To the students who started leaving the game early resulting in gaping holes in the student section seating — shame on you. Nobody will argue that as a Wildcat fan that game was no fun to watch. But that football team has given you plenty of reasons to party over in the past few years, and this was your turn to stick with it during the reality check. We talk about the national press doing regular Rodney Dangerfield's on the Wildcats — guess what you just did. If losing big to Nebraska at a home game in October was a midterm test of K-State's commitment to building a football tradition, a whole bunch of students just flunked midterms. How about rethinking that nasty instant gratification habit so you have a chance of passing Crowd Support 101?

Tiger defeat will not be easy; road trip out to Missouri

Editor,

I want to echo Chad Helin's column published on Oct. 8, and to encourage all loyal K-Staters to make the trip to Columbia this Saturday. It's only a four-hour drive and the Cats will certainly appreciate the support.

Misery is coming off its first road win and returning home to the friendly confines of Memorial Stadium. The Tigers have revenge on their minds after we stole (their words, not mine) the game here two years ago. I live in Columbia.

They will be pumped. We need to be there to support and pump up our Cats. I make it to the games in Manhattan. I'd love to see all of you in Columbia this Saturday. Misery can hardly give away their tickets. They are selling them for $12 each (minimum of four) through Thursday. Make the trip. Bring the whole gang! Support your Cats. Wear your purple! Help bring home a lopsided victory!

Eat 'em up, eat 'em up, KSU! Go State!

Students risk their own money dodging market pitfalls

One agricultural economics class requires more than notebooks and pencils.

Students need cash and a willingness to trade in the futures market to take Commodity Futures/Options Trading Seminar.

Each student invests $100, $200 or $300 and becomes a speculator. They form a trading committee with Buchanan and Company, a local brokerage firm.

This fall, the 20 students participating in the class pooled together $3,000 to invest. The remaining balance of the fund after deductions, such as broker's commission, is redistributed to students at the end of semester.

Every class period, a new trade is recommended by a group of two to four students. It is a formal, written trade report with an oral presentation. The class then makes amendments and votes. A majority vote is required to make a trade.

Each $100 share a student has is equal to one vote. In Monday's class, the students approved a contract to sell corn.

The students also monitor active trades. Also on Monday, they discussed offsetting a previous soybean sell. They voted on whether to buy back now or wait for the price to decrease more for a greater profit. They decided to wait and buy in the future.

Students also write evaluations of peer trade recommendations and act as mediators in class discussions.

They can trade all commodities, from wheat to silver.

This semester, wheat, corn, cattle and soybeans have been traded, said Ted Schroeder, professor of agricultural economics, who teaches the two credit-hour class.

"It's the only class I've ever taken to get actual experience. We put our own money in, and our decisions affect our own financial standing," said Joe Parcell, a graduate student in agricultural economics, who has taken the class three times.

Schroeder said the class helps with decision making.

"I have heard from employers that students are technically well trained, but making decisions on tough calls is hard. This class helps in daily decision-making procedures," Schroeder said.

Pete Loewen, a broker with Buchanan and Company and 1993 graduate of animal science, took the class while he was at K-State.

He said he took related classes, but this one allows students to experience the emotional side of commodities because the students use their own money.

"There is fear and greed involved, like no other class," he said.

To aid in market prediction, the class set up a home page this fall. It helps with research by providing links to all commodity exchanges and giving weather reports. The address is (http://www.ksu.edu/~tcs/index.html).

The students go to many sources for market information.

"One year we were trading gold and even called up a pawn shop to get their perspective," Parcell said.

Typically each class has had a gain or loss of $15 per $100 invested. The range has been from a $35 gain to a $40 loss.

Schroeder said that making $35 per $100 invested is outstanding for two months of trading because the class is trading a small amount of money.

As of Monday, this semester's class was up $11.75 per $100 invested, Parcell said.

The class has been offered during the fall semester for the past six years.

Parcell said that it is offered in the fall when the market traditionally has lower volatility so students are not exposed to a lot of risk.

The lower risk is due to crop harvesting and more publication of trade reports. These give traders more of a feel for the market, Parcell said.

The class meets from 5 to 6 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays in Waters 328.

The class is open to undergraduate and graduate students.

The prerequisite is a commodity futures course. Schroeder said that students outside the College of Agriculture can also take it.

DEFINING TERMS

- Harvey Kiser, a K-State agricultural economist, summarizes trading in the futures market as entering into an agreement, called a contract.
- A contract to sell obligates the seller to deliver the commodity at a specific price, date and place in the future.
- A contract to buy is an obligation to accept the commodity in the future.
- Most obligations, however, are never met because the traders offset their transactions before the delivery date. This means that a trader who bought will sell, and one who sold will buy.
- The object is to buy low and sell high. If traders think the price of a commodity will go down, they will sell contracts and later buy back at a lower price.
- Traders attempt to predict which direction the market will go. They follow the market daily, look at market trends from previous years and watch the weather. They also get information from the Internet, trade publications and brokers.

Assistant coach accepts NMSU job

Ward

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

K-State assistant baseball coach Rocky Ward has accepted the head coaching job at New Mexico State.

Ward replaces Elliott Avent, who resigned to accept a position with North Carollna State.

Ward has been the hitting instructor at K-State for the past two years.

"You hate to lose a great assistant," head baseball coach Mike Clark said.

"But you want them to be in position to accept a head coaching job. Hopefully he'll use the experience he derived from here to be successful there."

Ward is a graduate of Ohio State, where he played catcher and third base for Gary Ward, now the coach at Oklahoma State and Rocky Ward's father.

The K-State baseball team is concluding fall practice this week with intrasquad scrimmages.

Clark said he has noticed the players have stepped up their performance since Rocky Ward's departure last Thursday, .

"These guys have hit the ball better this week, and I'm proud of that," he said.

"And I know the system, so that helps out."

Clark said his intentions are to replace Rocky Ward with Assistant Coach Mike Hensley and to open the No. 2 assistant coaching position for applications.

Helping Clark and Hensley out are Travis Janssen and Steve Miller. Janssen played baseball last season at New Mexico State before a leg injury ended his season early.

Miller was part of the promotions department at the University of Washington last year and played infield for a Division II school in Alabama.

With Rocky Ward's departure, Clark said the team won't really be affected this year.

"The guys know the system, especially the older guys," he said. "What'll really affect us is how players handle it. If they stay focused and remember the system, they'll be OK."

As to how he believes Ward will do at NMSU, Clark said Ward has a lot of positive things on which to build going for him.

"He's going to be a good coach," he said. "He's got a system, and he believes in that system. He'll stay with that system. He's got a great offensive ballpark down there, and his players will put up good numbers.

"Plus, he's just a good player's coach."

K-State's basketball teams are preparing for a new era of Wildcat basketball, and full of talent, they are

Locked & Loaded

Questions looming for young men's team

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The 1995-96 edition of the K-State basketball team was young. This year's is even younger.

The Wildcats have only one senior this year, center Gerald Eaker. He is matched with seven players yet to receive a letter.

Eaker is the only person locked into a position.

"Gerald is the only clear-cut favorite for the five spot," Coach Tom Asbury said. "Gerald is bigger and stronger, and he's in the twilight of his career being a fifth-year senior."

Backing up Eaker will be a pair of seven-footers, junior college transfer Dax Jones, true freshman Joe Leonard and versatile sophomore Shawn Rhodes. Leonard could be red-shirted, Asbury said.

The point guard position is up for grabs between sophomore Aaron Swartzendruber and sophomore transfer Chris Griffin. Griffin will likely win the starting role with Swartzendruber seeing a healthy amount of playing time off the bench.

"Griffin is a very intensive and aggressive player," Asbury said. "He doesn't have the range that we'd like a point to have, but he'll work on it. He's the type of player that will be in foul trouble because he's used to being so aggressive."

Everything that Griffin lacks, Swartzendruber can make up for.

"Aaron played well for us defensively, and he's shown he can run the offense," Asbury said. "He wasn't as consistent as we would have liked him to be last year."

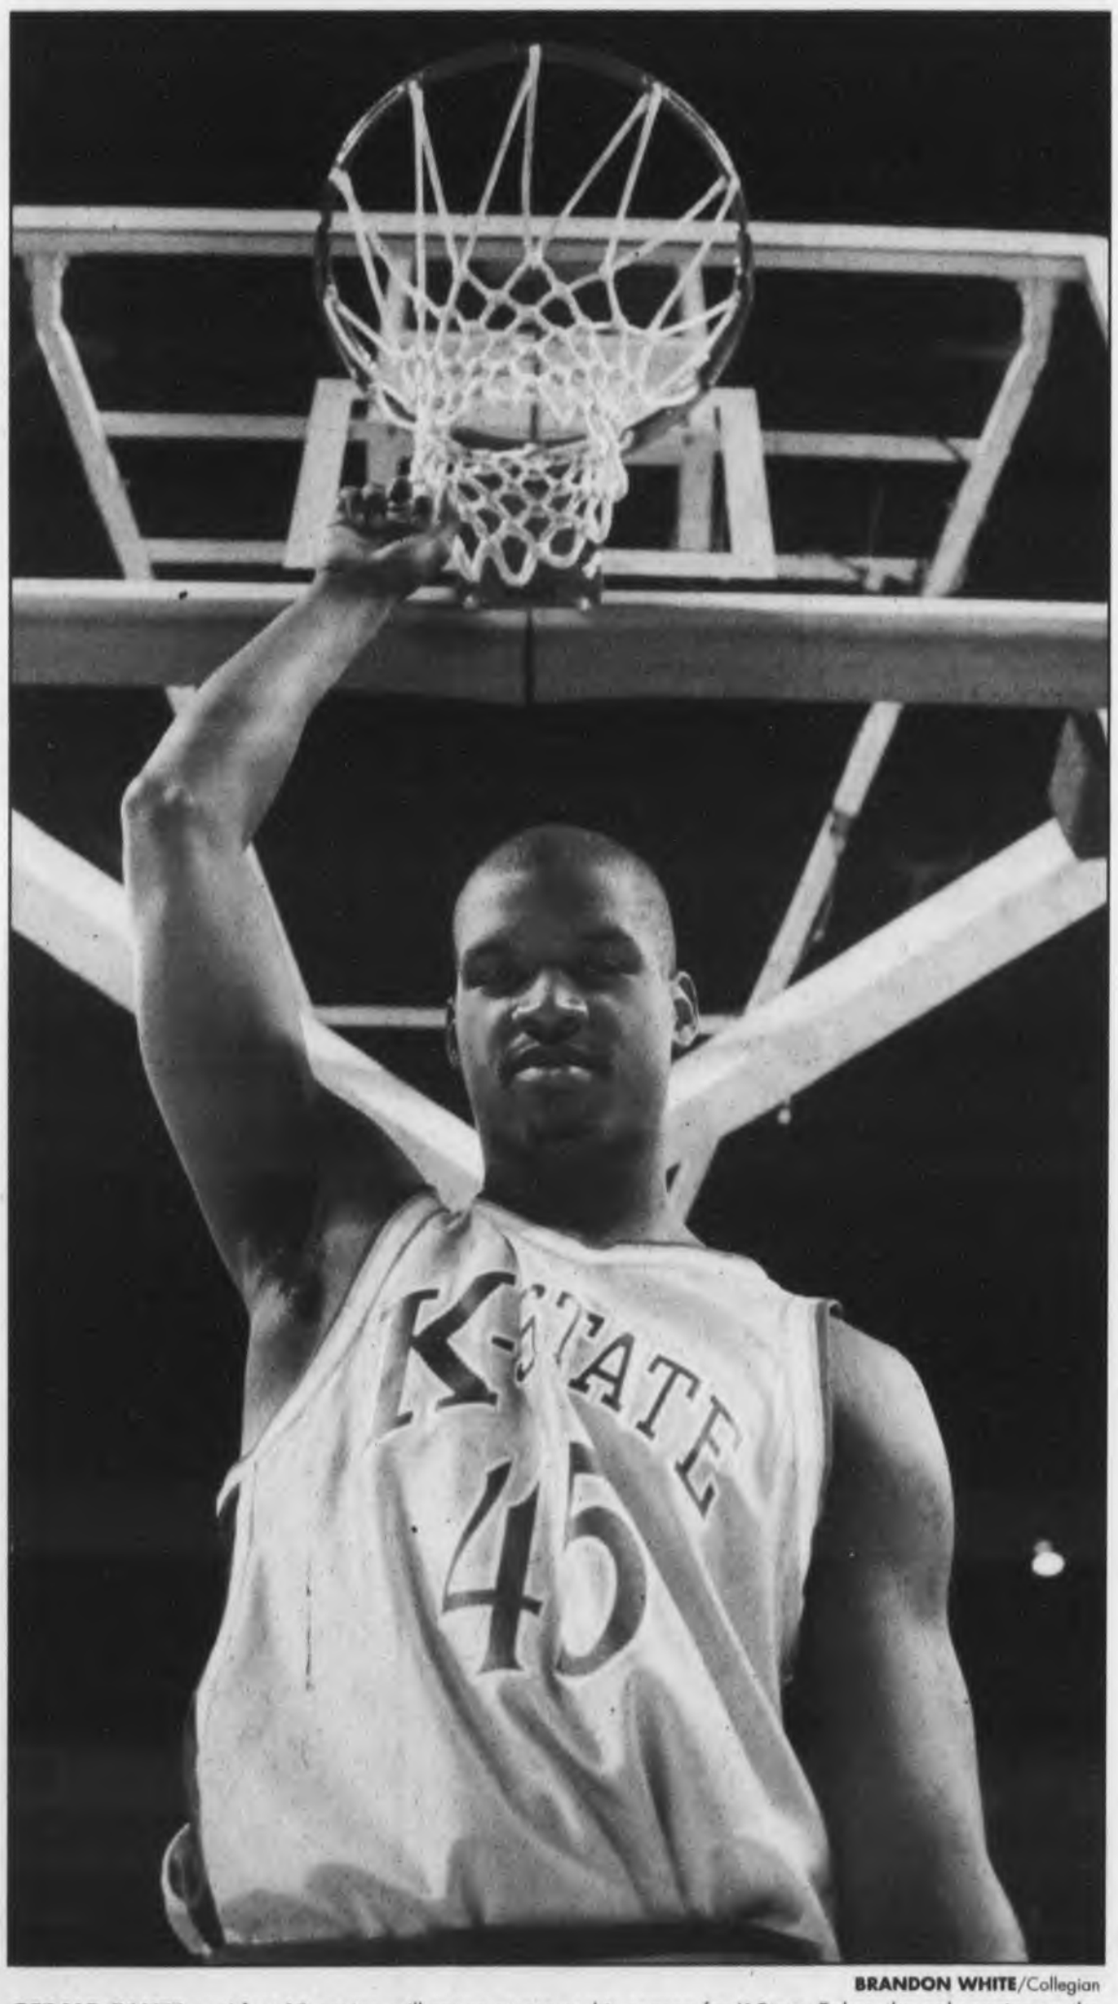
At shooting guard, sophomore Ayome May, true freshman Josh Reid and sophomore Chris Marsh will vie for time this year. May started 26 games last season and appears to be this year's likely starter.

At small forward, Marcus McCullough, a junior transfer from Olney, Ill.; Pero Vasiljevic, freshman from Simi Valley, Calif.; and junior two-year letterman Mark Young will all look for playing time. Young started 23 games last year, including all 14 conference games.

The power-forward spot will be put on proven sophomores Rhodes' and Manny Dies' shoulders. Rhodes averaged 4.8 points per game last year while Dies averaged 2.2.

Even with a lack of certainty in personnel, Asbury said he is ready to get the season under way with the first practice Oct. 20.

"I'm excited about the season," Asbury said. "We haven't established any goals, but we will after two or three weeks of practice. It's just too early, and simply, we don't know what we've got."



With so many new faces, one thing the Cats still lack is a true shooter. Asbury said the team, which didn't shoot well last year, could still have shooting woes.

"I think we've got some bigger, better players," Asbury said. "We still don't have the drop-dead shooter, but we can hopefully overcome that."

Still, Asbury said he thinks K-State can have success this year.

"I don't think it will be a rebuilding year," Asbury said.

"Even though we are extremely young, we have good kids who have played a lot."

DEBBIE PATTERSON, women's basketball coach, poses for a photo Tuesday in Bramlage Coliseum. This will be Patterson's first year as collegiate head coach, serving as an assistant at Vanderbilt before coming to K-State.

New era beginning for Wildcat women

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

When three players graduate, four more transfer and the entire coaching staff turns over, a basketball team has a lot of questions to answer.

Although Coach Debbie Patterson won't know everything until practice starts Oct. 20, she said she is satisfied with what she does know about the women's basketball team.

"We have a short roster," Patterson said of her nine players, "but it's a roster we have a lot of positive feelings about. We have four seniors on our team, and we have four returning starters."

Among those seniors is point guard Kjersten Larson. The Cats had three point guards on last year's roster — not including Larson, who spent most of the season at forward. But the graduation of one and departure of two others means Larson is likely to return to the starting spot she had as a freshman.

"I think it's going to be a team thing, though," Larson said.

"Point guard is kind of like your quarterback, so I think I'll have some responsibilities in making things run as smoothly as possible. With a new coaching staff, we'll all be learning and adjusting."

K-State's apparent lack of depth at the point is mitigated by its depth at the off-guard spot.

Sophomore Brit Jacobson, a lightning-quick slashing guard, returns as the Wildcats' top scorer (14.8 points per game) and No. 2 rebounder (5.4 rebounds per game). Senior Missy Decker, also a starter, was one of the Big 8's most effective three-point shooters.

The Cats have a number of forwards, including returning starters senior Andria Jones and sophomore Jenny Coalson. Coalson earned a reputation as a defensive stopper, while Jones combines post strength with an outside shot and a finesse game that make her an effective scorer from anywhere on the floor.

Sophomore Sara Munson adds depth at the forward spot, giving the Wildcats speed and athleticism. Freshman Angie Finkes adds size (6 feet 1 inch) and a proven scoring touch, averaging 30.3 ppg as a senior at Kenton Ridge (Ohio) High School.

Senior center Kayla Hester is another inside/outside threat, with the ability to post up in addition to hitting eight three-pointers last season.

Freshman Nicky Ramage adds depth at center, although Patterson said she hopes to move Ramage to the perimeter.

"She spent her career in the post," Patterson said.

"But I look for her to be a three-player. Nicky has an incredible amount of athleticism and versatility on the floor."

Although K-State will be a significantly smaller team than many of its opponents, Hester said she expects the post players to use that lack of size to their advantage.

"Since we're not going to have the height, you'll probably see us going to the perimeter more and shooting from outside or taking it to the post," she said.

"We'll probably be a bit quicker, more agile than our taller opponents."

Once again, Cat fans show true colors

Get ready for a little bit of the old, a little bit of the new and a little bit in between.

■ OK, K-State students — and I direct myself entirely at students — it's time for me to bash your fan support once again.

I'm sure you're probably tired of the same old routine being spouted from the Collegian sports desk and from letters to the editor on the opinion page.

Frankly, I'm tired of the entire fan support, or lack thereof, being an issue.

It was disappointing, to say the least, to walk through the tailgating parties before Saturday's game and see the number of red shirts I saw there.

MY

Shana
NEWELL

But disappointing would not have been the word I'd have chosen once the game started and I saw the number of red shirts in the stands. Appalling, maybe.

There were 43,915 people in the stands Saturday. Only 4,000 of those people were supposed to be Husker fans. I'll allow for 200-300 more who were sly enough to purchase tickets from K-State's ticket office.

There weren't 4,300 Husker fans at KSU Stadium Saturday. There were at least 7,000 or 8,000 red-faced people.

How did they get their tickets? My bet is starving K-State college students sold out their football team in the name of money.

I'm not one to talk about needing money. My financial aid still hasn't come in. I'm hurting. But if I had a ticket to sell, I would have made damn sure it didn't go to a Nebraska fan, no matter how much green they waved in front of me.

■ Disappointing? Yes. But the worst was yet to come.

Show some class, K-Staters. Your tasteless booing of Husker and former Wichita Collegiate standout DeAngelo Evans was ridiculous and completely lacking in class.

If you had the talent Evans has — and his talent should be obvious after Saturday's performance — would you choose the great running-back school of Nebraska or K-State, a program still experiencing growing pains?

Evans was not the first Kansas product to seek greener pastures, and he will not — I repeat, will not — be the last, especially if K-State fans continue showing they don't deserve to keep homegrown talent within state boundaries.

And that's something that will be hard to do if fans continue giving up on a team by the middle of the third quarter.

■ This is where the students were absolutely pathetic.

When K-State's defense needed the noise and the fervor and the home-field advantage it deserved, Wildcat "faithful" deserted them. The students who were still there were too busy booing Evans to remember to cheer for the defense.

Enough from me on that, but I sure hope you guys grow up and realize a team won't win unless the fans win first. In my opinion, K-State fans lost in a game they shouldn't have, especially at home.

■ Basketball season is nearing, K-State fans. Tuesday was Media Day for K-State basketball, and I am excited.

There are too many questions to be answered for me to say how K-State will do this year. It's possible the Cats will tear up the Big 12, especially now that Jock Strap Vaughn is most likely out for the season. On the other hand, it's possible the Cats will dwell in the cellar for most of the season.

Either way, keep in mind what Coach Tom Asbury is doing here at K-State. He's building a powerhouse. It might take time, but with, ahem, fan support, it'll happen. Mark Nov. 8 and Nov. 17 on your schedule. I expect to see Bramlage Coliseum filled with purple when the men's and women's teams take the court for the first time this season.

■ Speaking of basketball season, Bramlage has a new floor. It's comparable to the Toronto Raptors floor. I don't like it, but it'll probably grow on me. But right now, it looks like a fishhead has been dropped in the middle of the arena.

■ Good luck, baseball coach Rocky Ward, in your new endeavors at New Mexico State.

■ Good luck, women's crew, in your first-ever collegiate race Saturday at the Head of the Kaw in Kansas City.

■ Congratulations are in order for K-State's volleyball team. For the first time ever in K-State history, the Cats are ranked in the AVCA Coaches Top 25 Poll with a No. 23 ranking. Keep the wins coming this weekend against Baylor and No. 25 Texas Tech.

BOB HOMOLKA, a K-State-Salina professor, traveled to Arlington, Texas, last week in case of a major-league umpire strike. Homolka umpires collegiate baseball games and on occasion has officiated major-league games.

TARA WRAY
sports writer

A K-State-Salina professor was called away from his scholastic duties last week and sent to the Ballpark at Arlington, Texas, to fill in for major-league umpires in case of a strike.

Bob Homolka, department chair of the art science and business department at K-State-Salina's College of Technology and a 23-year veteran of umpiring, was sent to Texas last Thursday along with three other replacement umpires.

"We were prepared to work both Friday's and Saturday's games," Homolka said. "They had us in a separate dressing room, ready to go out."

Homolka and the other umpires didn't get the chance to call either game. An injunction was filed Friday, prohibiting major-league umpires from striking.

"I was torn whether or not I should work," Homolka said. "I wanted to umpire, but I supported their cause."

The umpires threatened to strike after Baltimore Orioles player Roberto Alomar spit in the face of umpire John Hirschbeck.

Homolka said the punishment Alomar received, a five-game suspension effective next season, was not enough for the conduct he showed.

"I thought he should have been held responsible for his actions," Homolka said. "He should have been penalized."

Homolka, a native of Salina, said his umpiring roots are centered mostly in college-level games. He calls between 80 and 100 games a season.

Homolka was one of six umpires in the nation chosen to call the 1995 College World Series. He has also been called upon to umpire in the big leagues. Last season he umpired four series in the National League.

Homolka said he didn't always call games. He started out coaching them.

Homolka said when the time came that he was umpiring during games, he knew a change was due.

"I was doing more umpiring than I should have been," Homolka said. "I quit coaching and stuck with umpiring."

While Homolka didn't get the chance to umpire in the playoff game, he said his trip to Arlington was still worthwhile.

"They basically paid us to watch the games," Homolka said.

Cats putting NU loss behind them

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

It didn't take long for frustration to sink in for K-State's offense Saturday.

Wide receiver Kevin Lockett said it started on the first play in a 39-3 loss to the Nebraska Cornhuskers.

By the end of the game, the Wildcats had accumulated just 86 yards on 52 plays, averaging 1.7 yards per snap.

"The offense was inadequately prepared for that ball game," Coach Bill Snyder said. "When the execution is not as it should be, then there is a problem with preparation."

The plan was for K-State to open up its passing game on the Husker secondary, which had shown some weakness.

Brian Kavanagh went into the game with the second-best passing efficiency in the conference. His 147.4 quarterback rating ranked him 20th nationally.

But Kavanagh managed to complete just five of 19 passes for 34 yards, and was intercepted two times. He was also sacked three times for minus-21 yards.

"The coaches had prepared me as well as they could," Kavanagh said. "I was audibling too much at times. I just all-around had a terrible day."

Kavanagh and the rest of K-State's offense will look to turn things around Saturday in Columbia, Mo.

The Cats will take on the struggling Missouri Tigers who are ranked seventh in the Big 12 in total defense, allowing 30.8 points a game.

One area that has shown some weakness has been the Tigers' run defense.

Through five games, the Tiger's defense is allowing 239.6 yards on the ground to opponents.

"Statistically, people have run on them quite a bit," Lockett said. "But you've got to look at the teams they have played. Those teams have had some of the best rushing attacks in the nation."

"To whatever degree people have had success against Missouri, it probably won't be that easy for us," Snyder said.

If the K-State offense can come out and establish a running game, Kavanagh's passing attack should open up.

"Against Nebraska, we couldn't run the ball, so that didn't open up the passing game," tight end Justin Swift said.

"Our game plan is to establish the running game against Missouri. If we do that, then it will be a lot easier to throw the ball."

Meeting brings pledge of peace from Arafat to Israeli officials

> "We must live as neighbors and watch out for each other's interests."

> • YASSER ARAFAT
> PLO LEADER

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAESAREA, Israel (AP) — With Palestinian negotiators back at the table after walking off in anger, Yasser Arafat made his first public visit to Israel on Tuesday and pledged to keep his police from firing again on Israeli soldiers.

Sitting in garden chairs on the terrace of President Ezer Weizman's villa, Arafat and Weizman traded compliments, shook hands for the cameras and agreed there was no alternative to peace. The cozy exchange capped Arafat's transformation in two years from Israel's arch foe to its most important peace partner.

Tuesday's meeting came less than two weeks after deadly gun battles between Israeli and Palestinian security forces in the West Bank and Gaza Strip that left 78 people dead.

The cordial luncheon and Arafat's promises contrasted sharply with the deep discord evident to the south, at Israeli-Palestinian peace talks on Israel's border with Gaza.

On Monday, Palestinian negotiators balked at Israeli demands for improved security arrangements for Jewish settlers in the West Bank town of Hebron, where an Israeli troop pullout is long overdue.

Only the intervention of U.S. envoy Dennis Ross brought the Palestinians back to the table that night.

Israel said it wanted to retain the right of hot pursuit of suspected Palestinian assailants into areas that will come under Palestinian control in Hebron.

Israel also wants to retain control over a broader area that links the Jewish enclaves with the Tomb of the Patriarchs, a site in the center of town that is holy to both Muslims and Jews.

Even considering the Israeli demands would be tantamount to renegotiating the terms of peace agreements signed with Israel's previous government, said Ibrahim Kreishe, a senior Palestinian negotiator.

Still, talks resumed at the Erez border crossing, with Hebron remaining the key item on the agenda.

Later Tuesday, Israel's army announced it would ease the complete blockade imposed on the West Bank and Gaza during the fighting and allow 10,000 Gazan workers into the Jewish state as of Wednesday morning.

Arafat said he was not discouraged by setbacks.

"The most important thing is that we began the meetings," Arafat said in this Mediterranean town, where he was flown by an Israeli air force helicopter from his Gaza City headquarters.

"As long as there are meetings, no doubt something that is good for the two peoples will come out of them," Arafat said. "We must live as neighbors and watch out for each other's interests."

Judging team places third at intercollegiate contest

HEATHER HJETLAND
staff reporter

Four K-State students tested their knowledge of bovines at the Mid-South Intercollegiate Dairy Judging Contest in Memphis, Tenn.

The K-State dairy judging team placed third out of 14 teams competing at the national contest Sept. 28. Top honors went to Iowa State University, and Oklahoma State University was second.

Team members Travis Larson, sophomore in animal science and agricultural education; Nathan Campbell, junior in animal science; Steve Zoschke, junior in animal science; and Randy Mullinix, junior in animal science, are coached by John Shirley, associate professor of animal science.

Dairy judging contests are based on placing classes of four female cows. Ten classes are divided by breed and age of the cows.

Contestants base their rankings on each cow's features, such as dairy character, general appearance, mammary system and body capacity. The correct placing is determined by an official judge. Each class is worth 50 points.

On five of the classes, contestants recite oral reasons to different official judges, giving an explanation of their decision. Contestants are scored according to the validity of reasons for placing the class. Presentation and proper terminology are also accounted for in the score.

The contest winner is determined by the highest score, meaning that he or she came closest to the official judge's decision and recited the best oral reasons.

"Oral reasons are a good tool for making decisions and defending your decisions," Mullinix said.

He said by judging he has traveled all over the country and has met a lot of people and made good contacts.

"Judging will help me in the future when I'm an ag teacher and coach judging teams," said Larson, who has competed since the third grade.

To prepare for contests, the team members practice once or twice a week. Before going to Memphis, they took a weekend trip to Springfield, Mo., to practice placing animals at dairy herds.

On Oct. 1, the team competed at the World Dairy Exposition in Madison, Wis. They placed 20th out of 28 teams.

"We had a good score. It's just a tight contest," Shirley said.

The team competes at three to four national contests each year. The next competition will be in January in Fort Worth, Texas.

Throughout the year, the team helps out with state and national 4-H and FFA contests by scoring reasons classes.

Members are honored by having a team picture hung in Call Hall.

Professor performs in chapel

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

At first, Monday, Oct. 7 looked like the perfect date for her concert, but that was before Mary Ellen Sutton, professor of music, looked at the Kansas City Chiefs' schedule.

"I picked my date in early summer, and it was before I got the Chiefs' schedule, and I was just devastated," Sutton said. "I have my VCR recording, though."

The show went on anyway. A large crowd turned out at All Faiths Chapel to enjoy Sutton's one hour and 15 minute organ recital Monday night.

Sutton has been a professor of music at K-State since 1974.

She knew, however, where the minds of some in the audience were, as evidenced by what she told the crowd before the second half of her performance:

"For those of you who care, the Chiefs and Steelers are through with one quarter and the score is nothing-nothing," Sutton said.

As for the performance itself, it was well-received by the audience. Sutton played eight pieces and said that the program did not really have a theme.

"When you plan a program, you think about an hour's worth of music and a contrast of pieces and composers that will be interesting to the listeners," Sutton said. "There's a couple of unifiers, though. The (Max) Reger piece and the (Johann) Pachelbel piece are with the same choral, but other than that, there wasn't really a theme."

> "I picked my date in early summer and it was before I got the Chiefs schedule, and I was just devastated. I have my VCR recording, though.

> • MARY ELLEN SUTTON
> PROFESSOR OF MUSIC

Sutton played four pieces in each half, including two by Johann Sebastian Bach and works by Americans Vincent Persichetti and Powell Weaver.

"I always do an American composer and this time I did two," Sutton said. "Weaver was from Kansas City and was a teacher of one of my teachers."

When asked what her favorite piece was, Sutton said, "That's like asking a parent to choose among your children, but I suppose the Bach Concerto at the end of the first half."

Sutton's second-to-last piece, entitled "The Squirrel," was a favorite of the crowd. Its suspicious tone was reminiscent of a "Looney Toons" cartoon. The piece, which was the shortest of the evening at three minutes, has an interesting story behind it.

"That piece had been out of print for years," Sutton said. "I just found the music this summer. A lady retired, gave my sister in Kansas City her organ music and my sister, who also plays for a church, said, 'Why don't you come in and look at it.' I went through it and there was that piece."

"I've looked for it in used-music stores for years."

Sutton has played the organ at First United Methodist Church since 1977.

She said the piece was interesting to her because of the K-State campus.

"Once you title it, 'The Squirrel,' everyone who has been on campus has watched these wonderful squirrels do their thing, so immediately there's a program," she said.

After the performance, Sutton greeted some of the audience before heading home to watch the Chiefs' game.

"I'm a sports fan and if I lived closer to Kansas City, I would probably go to the Chiefs' games," she said.

If the result of the Chiefs' game was any indication, many in the audience were probably glad they came to Sutton's recital on Monday.

Health book challenges standard weight beliefs

DAVID C. POOLE
guest writer

Once in a while, someone with expertise and audacity challenges conventional medical opinion and pernicious dogma.

Glenn Gaesser, a doctor of medicine, does so in his newly released book, "Big Fat Lies: The truth about your weight and your health."

Gaesser addresses the connection between health, exercise habits and body weight.

This book presents compelling evidence that aiming for a person's so-called ideal body weight by caloric restriction is more likely to encourage premature demise than budding good health.

"Big Fat Lies" is the result of years of careful evaluation of the pertinent body composition, and dietary and exercise scientific literature.

For those who aim for a balance of good dietary habits and exercise to optimize health and vitality, Gaesser's book provides sound and informed guidelines.

For anybody who has ever had their body weight judged as excessive based on height-weight tables or ever had a physician dictate that they lose weight, "Big Fat Lies" is essential to read.

The rationale and advice presented will likely improve quality and the length of life.

a stroke after she had finally gotten her heart beating on its own," Harwood said. "In the process, she had a stroke. The left side of her body is somewhat paralyzed. Her left arm and left leg are not able to move right now."

The friends of Garry and Paige McCarthy have invited everyone interested to a fundraiser on their behalf.

The event will take place from 4 to 7 p.m. Sunday at Wildcat Creek Sports Center 3639 Anderson Ave. Anyone who is interested should contact Jeff Kruse at 776-8338, Linda Morgan at 776-0419 or Jim Badders at 537-4761.

The barbecue will help raise funds for the family, and Wildcat Creek Sports Center is donating the use of its facilities.

In addition, Stagg Hill Golf Course is donating an item to be raffled off. The suggested family donation is $50 for the barbecue.

"Anyone is invited to the barbecue," Harwood said. "We are hoping for a good turnout."

In addition, a Paige McCarthy Fund has been set up at two locations to help the family with financial support.

The family and friends ask that donations be sent to the Paige McCarthy Fund, c/o Manhattan Catholic School, 306 S. Juliette Ave., Manhattan, KS 66502. Donations can be sent to Commerce Bank at 727 Poyntz Ave., Manhattan, KS 66502.

IRA claims responsibilty for British attack

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BELFAST, Northern Ireland — The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility Tuesday for the double car-bomb attack on the British army's headquarters in Belfast, which wounded 31 and brought Northern Ireland back to the brink of conflict.

It was the outlawed group's first bomb attack in Northern Ireland since mid-1994. In February, it broke a 17-month cease-fire with a deadly bombing in London; attacks followed elsewhere in Britain and on a British army base in Germany.

A telephone caller using a verified codeword told RTE, the Irish national broadcasters in Dublin, that the IRA committed Monday's strike inside Thiepval Barracks, the heart of the 18,000-strong military presence in the British-ruled province.

Prime Minister John Major said the claim showed the IRA had not changed.

"It shows they still rely on terrorist violence and are indifferent to human life," he said.

Earlier Tuesday, telephone callers told news organizations in Belfast and Dublin that the dissident group Continuity IRA was responsible, but the callers provided no codeword to validate the claim.

The British government had already indicated it believed the IRA was responsible.

The bombings were "certainly consistent with a terrorist organization that declared an end to a cease-fire which it had proclaimed in 1994," Northern Ireland secretary Patrick Mayhew told reporters.

Whether Northern Ireland returns to tit-for-tat bloodshed now remains to be seen.

From Major on down, politicians appealed to the province's pro-British paramilitary groups to refrain from striking back. The groups, known as loyalists have observed a cease-fire for two years.

"We must not let (the IRA) succeed," Major said. "I appeal to all loyalists not to fall into this trap."

Loyalists killed more than 800 Catholics during a 25-year period, a campaign they say pushed the IRA to stop its own offensive in September 1994.

A month later, the loyalist Ulster Defense Association and Ulster Volunteer Force, both rooted in militant Protestant areas, laid down their guns. Some members now feel obligated to return to eye-for-an-eye tactics.

"There's still a chance we can step back from this, but in realistic terms, it's a slim chance," said David Ervine, who leads an Ulster Volunteer Force-linked party in peace-talks.

He urged the pro-British groups not to be provoked into action by the IRA. "The loyalists must not now do what their enemy wants them to do," Ervine said. "Don't do it."

Loyalists didn't strike back after two earlier IRA-style attacks in Northern Ireland were claimed instead by "Continuity IRA," which is believed to include disgruntled IRA members.

SENATE

When Hansen showed up and signed the amendment, they returned to those allocations.

The first of these was a special allocation for Young Democrats, which requested funding for a guest speaker, Kansas House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer.

Because Sawyer is a state employee, Senate cannot allocate money for an honorarium, or paid speaker.

According to funding guidelines on honorariums, Young Democrats cannot receive money for a Collegian advertisement to let students know about Sawyer's speech.

Maggie Keating, arts and science senator, wrote an amendment asking for an exception to this regulation allowing a $36 allocation for Collegian ads.

Some senators said they were concerned this would set a precedent for groups to ask for this exception.

"If you do something for one group, I really feel strongly that you must do it for every group," Gabe Eckert, agriculture senator, said.

Vaughn Strickland, graduate senator, said this was not a bad precedent because it encouraged people to bring in speakers who don't require a $500 honorarium.

The amendment failed.

Another amendment was presented by Lach Franquemont to the allocation for the Native American Student Body for its Powwow.

The group requested $1,200 for the rental of Ahearn Field House, but the Allocations Committee recommended allocating $500.

Franquemont's amendment called for an exception to the regulation that only $500 could be allocated for rental of space so the group could get $1,200.

"If we don't give them the money for the rental of Ahearn, this project won't go forward," Sean Tomb, arts and sciences senator, said.

The amendment passed, with only one senator voting against it.

Allocations for the High School Leadership Conference Planning Team and the Asian American Students also had amendments asking for exceptions to the funding regulations.

All the allocations passed, and the Senate heard first readings for the next batch of allocations.

Abbott announced she had recently been informed that, according to Roberts' Rules of Order, Parliamentarian Patrick Carney was not allowed to be a voting member of Senate and he had therefore decided to resign his Senate seat.

The meeting lasted past the Collegian's press time, and Abbott had to call the restless senators to order several times during the long meeting.

PLAY

Serebryakov, and his career as a professor of art and philosophy. When Serebryakov retires and returns home with his young wife, Yelena, the family realizes it has been disillusioned with Serebryakov.

"The rhythm of life changes, hidden loves are revealed, hearts broken, lives are changes, and then Serebryakov and Yelena leave. That is the story," Macfarland said.

The play also touches on the themes of mid-life crisis and deforestation.

Many students have read Chekhov in a class.

"So many things get missed when you read it," Macfarland said. "Hopefully, when you see it, a lot of things will come to life."

The play's setting is as ironic as the play itself.

The set is a series of suspended platforms surrounded with sand and rocks. The furniture and props are turn-of-the-century, but the characters are in modern dress. The backdrop is a painted desert scene.

"It's emotionally symbolic," Macfarland said. "We all have our little lives, and we sort of play them out against these big forces. It's a specific life against a symbolic backdrop."

Macfarland said guests can get a feel for the play if they come to the show early. Actors will be frozen on stage when the doors open at 7:30 p.m.

'Roofies' might have surfaced in city

SPEED

▶ Manhattan police are investigating the possibility of the use of an illegal drug that can cause seizures, respiratory failure and coma-like states.

BREE BISNETTE AND JEREMY KELLEY staff writers

Students consuming alcoholic beverages should be aware of GHB, a drug with potentially dangerous effects similar to Rohypnol pills, or so-called roofies, a Riley County investigator said.

Three incidents in the Manhattan area within the last three weeks might have involved GHB, or gamma hydroxybutyric acid, said Captain Steve French, commander of the Riley County Police Department Investigation Division.

GHB is also known as liquid ecstasy or Gs. The drug acts as a strong anesthecticthat depresses the central nervous system when placed in alcoholic drinks.

French said it is suspected local victims might have ingested the drug at area bars or parties in their alcoholic beverages.

Responses to as little as four teaspoons of the drug combined with alcohol include respiratory failure, hallucinations, delirium and seizure-like activity, French said.

According to a report from the Mid-America Poison Control Center comas are also associated with GHB.

Due to the anesthetic nature of drugs like GHB and Rohypnol, which might make the victim unaware of the acts of others, some fears have emerged.

"People not remembering a criminal act while under the influence of GHB is a big concern," said Pam Spaulding, a pharmacist at Lafene Health Center. "Date rape is a concern. If you do not remember anything, you hate to think of the things people could make you do."

However, no cases involving rape or other violent crimes have been identified in connection with the drug in the Manhattan area, although victims did require hospitalization, French said.

"This is just something we want people to be aware of at this point," French said. "The effects are rapid. So, if you're with someone, and they are suddenly acting differently than what you believe their consumption level should allow, you need to seek medical attention."

The onset of GHB is between 15 and 30 minutes when ingested orally and a coma brought on by the drug typically lasts from one to two hours, with full recovery by eight hours, according to the Mid-America Poison Control Center's report.

Steps to prevent being drugged by GHB can be taken, French said.

"I strongly recommend that people at parties or in groups do not drink out of pitchers or punch bowls," French said. "Just avoid open containers. You may want to switch to bottles, cans or pressurized kegs which you know are sealed."

Spaulding recommends further surveillance of beverages in social settings. She recommends after a drink is opened, it should not be abandoned.

Minimum-wage change increases Union prices

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

K-State Student Union customers might need to reach for a bit more change the next time they make a purchase.

The almost 12-percent increase of the federal minimum wage has brought about price adjustments in the Union.

The changes can be attributed to the increased cost of labor in the Union.

Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said a decision was made to recognize the first step of the new federal minimum wage and pass the increase on to all student employees.

Employees who were already making more than the minimum wage also received pay increases in order to preserve the incentive program.

"We figured that by doing that increase for all of our student employees it would be around $43,000 additional labor expense for us," Pitts said.

Union administrators looked at three possible compensations for the increase in labor expense, including higher prices, shorter operating hours for Union services and reduced hours for Union employees.

"Without having a tremendous impact on our service level, outside of cutting services, those were the three options that we had," Pitts said.

Price increases might be the most noticeable changes to regular customers at the Union. Although the increase was not across-the-board, many items in food service were targeted for the hike.

> K-STATE STUDENT UNION DIRECTOR

"There were some specific items that we felt were not priced correctly, and we had the opportunity of incorporating the minimum wage adjustment," Pitts said. "We decided this was as good a time as any to make those adjustments."

Paul Stolle, director of dining services, said about 85 percent of food service items were affected by a price increase. Price adjustments peaked at 4.5 percent, which does not not cover the entire minimum-wage increase.

Stolle said a 10- or 11-percent increase could not be justified; therefore, most changes were between 4 and 4.5 percent.

Laura Parker, senior in pre-physical therapy, said she eats regularly at the Union. "It seemed to be more expensive than usual today. I asked

Student-records database to be shut down, replaced

SETH GURSS
staff reporter

Anyone who has plans to drop-add or receive financial assistance next week should do it soon.

A student-record database shutdown will begin at midnight Friday and continue until Oct. 21.

Student records will be inaccessible in all campus offices during the shutdown.

"It's going to dramatically reduce the service we can provide to students," Larry Moeder, director of student financial assistance, said.

He said students who plan to pick up financial aid during that week will not be able to.

Moeder also said other schools with the same database have done a similar shutdown in as short as a weekend.

The Office of Information Systems will shut the computers down to reload a new database system. It will take 10 days because the office is replacing the current system with a much more powerful database. It is more than a minor update, David Hillier, associate director of information systems, said.

Currently, K-State has a database program that is not protected in the case of a problem.

"It is off maintenance. The vendor won't help us any more," Hillier said.

Because the program is out-of-date, Hillier said this could cost K-State a lot of money if something does go wrong.

"This is the second-best time of the year to shut the computers down," Hillier said.

He said spring break is the only other time that would be better, but they missed the date last semester and don't have the time to wait until next semester.

Hillier also said this time period is pretty good because there are not a lot of things going on around campus in regard to admissions, financial assistance and drop-add.

Candidate champions for end to voter apathy, passage of farm bill

JESS LOUK
staff reporter

U.S. Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan., who is running for U.S. Senate, addressed farm issues, voter apathy, and his triumphs and tribulations as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee Wednesday.

Roberts spoke to a packed house at the K-State Student UnionLittle Theateer as part of the Legacy Lecture Series.

Roberts said American farm programs since the New Deal are based on controlling production, as a way of stabilizing prices so farmers could stay in business.

"Government subsidies, taxpayer subsidies grew atop a hodgepodge of rules and regulations that told farmers what to plant, when to plant and how to plant," Roberts said.

In 1995 with the Republican-controlled Congress, Roberts introduced Freedom to Farm, a bill that gives farmers the freedom to choose what they are going to plant.

"I convinced Newt Gingrich and the Newt world order and the Republican leaders that the time for reform for farm programs was upon us," Roberts said.

Freedom to Farm will save tax payers $10 billion over seven years, Roberts said.

"I'm for the Freedom to Farm Bill. I don't think it's any of the government's business what you plant," Scott Jeschke, junior in agribusiness, said.

Roberts also noted some of the Congress' accomplishments. Roberts said Congress applied tough self-reform by cutting perks, banning gifts and making itself subject to the same laws forced

Debate pits Peterson against Hochhauser

CECILY RODRIGUEZ
staff reporter

State representative candidates Jeff Peterson and Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, had the chance to share their opinions with K-State students Wednesday.

The Student Governing Association sponsored a debate between 66th District's democratic incumbent, Hochhauser, and Republican candidate Peterson at noon in the K-State Student Union.

Each question was first directed to one candidate and the other candidate was allowed two minutes for rebuttal. The first of 11 questions was addressed to Hochhauser. She was asked to explain the STARS program.

"The Student Tuition Assistance and Recognition Scholarship program is a program that I and other legislators propose be adopted for the purposes of providing needed tuition and fee money to Kansas students," Hochhauser said.

She said the program would allow students whose parents' adjusted income is $75,000 or less and who have maintained at least a 3.0 GPA all through high school to attend Kansas colleges and universities tuition-free and fee-free up to a maximum of $1,200 per semester.

The program would be paid for by using the interest on state idle funds, which generates $71 million per year. The STARS program wouldn't be implemented until the class of 1998 graduates from high school.

• PLANS TO OPEN UNDERGROUND HALL ANGERS ISRAELIS. Muslim authorities angered Israelis on Wednesday with plans to open a new underground prayer hall at the Al Aqsa Mosque, on the site revered by Jews as Temple Mount and beside the Israeli tourist-tunnel project that set off rioting last month. The announcement comes as Israelis and Palestinians try to reconstruct a peace shattered after Israel opened a new entrance to the tunnel at the base of the complex. The riots and clashes last month killed 78 people.

• JEWELL CLOSE TO BEING EXONERATED. The FBI has returned Richard Jewell's belongings and is no longer keeping tabs on him, indicating he is close to being exonerated in the Olympic Park bombing, his lawyers said. Jewell, the only publicly identified suspect in the July 27 bombing, was questioned Sunday by state and federal investigators for six hours.

• MEDITERRANEAN QUAKE ROCKS MIDDLE EAST. A strong Mediterranean earthquake rattled much of the Middle East on Wednesday, killing an Egyptian whose house collapsed on top of her and injuring 21 Cypriots. Buildings swayed in Cyprus, and panicked residents ran outside in Egypt, the two places that sustained the worst damage from the magnitude-6.8 quake. The temblor also was felt across Israel, Syria, Jordan, Lebanon, western Turkey and the Greek islands of Rhodes and Crete. The U.S. Geological Survey said the 3:10 p.m. earthquake occurred in the Mediterranean Sea about 20 miles southwest of the Cypriot port of Paphos and some 80 miles from Nicosia.

• IRA DEMANDS ENTRY INTO NEGOTIATIONS. The Irish Republican Army may have planned an attack on the British army's headquarters in Belfast four months ago — before the latest negotiations on Northern Ireland's future. The IRA bought one of the cars used in the attack on June 4. Six days after the IRA bought the car, negotiations among nine parties and the British and Irish governments began in east Belfast. The IRA-allied Sinn Fein party had demanded entry to the talks, but was barred because the IRA resumed its campaign of violence against British rule in February with a London truck bomb.

• COLLEGE HOCKEY PLAYER PARTIALLY PARALYZED. A college hockey player partially paralyzed after breaking his neck during practice underwent surgery Wednesday, with doctors hoping they can restore more feeling in his upper body. University of Alaska-Fairbanks sophomore Erik Drygas, 20, was injured when he crashed head-first into the boards Monday.

CORRECTIONS

• In Wednesday's Collegian it was incorrectly reported in the story "Fundraiser to aid graduate's family after heart failure" that a barbecue set up to raise money for Paige McCarthy and her family is open to the public. Because of the large number of people attending the event, the organizers must know beforehand the number of people attending the event in order to provide enough food. Therefore, the event is by invitation only. Any donations can be sent to the Paige McCarthy Family Fund, c/o Manhattan Catholic School, 306 S. Juliette Ave., Manhattan, KS 66502, or to Paige McCarthy Family Fund, c/o Commerce Bank, 727 Poyntz Ave., Manhattan, KS 66502.

• Due to a reporter's error, it was incorrectly reported in Wednesday's Collegian that former K-State assistant baseball coach Rocky Ward is a graduate of Ohio State. Ward is a graduate of Oklahoma State. It was also incorrectly reported that Ward's father, Gary, was the coach at Ohio State. Gary Ward was the coach at Oklahoma State.

• Due to a reporter's error, it was incorrectly reported that K-State Theatre will present "Uncle Vanya" in Nichols Theater at 7:30 p.m. tonight instead of 8 p.m. on Oct. 9. The Collegian regrets these error.

KKSU changes its tune

▪ Radio station introduces new sound, schedule

JANN STOUGH
staff reporter

The voice of K-State changes with the times.

KKSU-AM 580 has a new sound and a new schedule.

Listeners of the information station will no longer be able to hear any music-based broadcasting. To fine-tune some other programs, the station has done away with its classical music programming.

The biggest change is the re-emergence of a daily human ecology program.

"We cover issues that affect people's lives on a day-to-day basis," Larry Jackson, KKSU station manager, said. "It's not just home economics any more. We cover wellness, family and relationships."

The station has broadened its programs for a more up-to-date and diverse schedule.

"We've added a weekly feature about K-State research, computer technology, horticulture, tourism, cultural diversity and sports," Jackson said.

The station also covers the College of Veterinary Medicine. Jackson said the programs help people in Kansas with decisions that affect their lives.

"Last week we had a feature on how to choose a vet and another program on horse diseases that could affect some Kansas equine," Jackson said.

KKSU uses professors, faculty and staff at the university level to share its knowledge statewide.

> "We cover issues that affect people's lives on a day-to-day basis. It's not just home economics any more.
> • LARRY JACKSON
> KKSU STATION MANAGER

The overall change in format is program fine tuning.

"It wasn't a radical change. We just present more news on a regular day-to-day basis, where it used to be sporadic," Jackson said.

Changing times and staff changes are responsible for the new sound.

"With the recent staffing changes we reanalyzed what we had the ability to do," Jackson said.

The station has served an extension mission since 1924. Jackson said it still has the same mission to share the expertise of K-State with the people across all of Kansas.

The station has experienced a large staff turnover in the last year. Sixty percent of the personnel is new.

"Once we plugged in the new staff, we met and talked about what we are doing and what we ought to be doing," Jackson said.

He said the station had new energy, talents and equipment so it seemed like a good time to change.

"The way people live out in the state is not the same as it was in 1924. We devised programs we feel are of interest to people today," Jackson said.

Changing with the times not only affects the station's sound, but also the listeners.

Jackson said his biggest concern now is how the listeners are adjusting to the schedule change.

Ruby Williams, a local listener, said she has always enjoyed the news programs.

"It's very educational on a lot of topics," Williams said. "It's hard to get used to, but I'm sure it's all worth while."

Donahue to help kick off food drive

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

Phil Donahue will be in Manhattan to help kick off the mayor's annual holiday food drive.

Mayor Sydney Carlin announced during a press conference Wednesday that Donahue will speak at the Mayor's Holiday Hunger Experience Dinner.

SPEED

▶ Talk-show host Phil Donahue will be in Manhattan to speak at the Mayor's Holiday Hunger Experience Dinner Nov. 3.

The dinner will be at 7 p.m. Nov. 3 in the K-State Student Union. The dinner is the inaugural event in the Mayor's Holiday Tree program.

"His probing style will no doubt remind us of our personal responsibility to this challenge," Carlin said.

The holiday tree program helps raise money and food for families who are in need during the holiday season. It is supported through a variety of agencies including Cats for Cans at K-State and the Flint Hills Breadbasket.

Dennis Lull, senior co-chair member of the Mayor's Holiday Tree, said the program has helped serve more than 900 people during the holidays and collected more than 100,000 pounds of food. He said this year's goals include the collection of 125,000 pounds of food.

He said the goals set for this year include the collection of 125,000 pounds, but the real goal of the program is to feed the hungry.

Dustin Schafer, Cats for Cans member and junior in architectural engineering, said Cats for Cans contributed about 50,000 pounds of food to the program last year.

That was more than a third of the total amount collected for the entire program. Cats for Cans plans to collect canned goods at various times this year, including during the remaining K-State home football games.

IN OUR OPINION

Drug forces us to be suspcious at parties

It's arrived.

And boy, did it arrive in Manhattan with a bang.

The so-called date-rape drug has made its way from New York and Los Angeles all they way to Manhattan.

Several women were given the drug mixed with alcohol at a greek party last weekend.

The women were vomiting blood and were unconscious for nine hours.

Thankfully, as far as anyone knows, none of the women involved sexually violated.

But with the low incidence of reported rapes — especially acquaintance rape, we might never know for sure.

Assuming there were no rapes and the drug's effects are not long term, Manhattan was pretty lucky in its first reported experience with this drug — considering some of the results of this drug around the country.

Lucky in that the situation was not worse, and the women will probably not experience any long-term effects.

This should serve as a wake-up call for K-State.

We need to be careful. Women especially need to be aware of what and where they are drinking.

Don't set your drink down or let it out of your sight — not even for a second.

B.Y.O.B. parties might be the in thing from now on.

But make sure that even if you do bring your own, you make sure no one else does anything to it. It only takes a second to slip a drug in there.

We also would like to appeal to the houses involved and Greek Affairs to share more information about the event.

Fraternities and sororities have long histories of being secretive.

But to the non-greek population, it only makes it look like a cover-up.

We don't blame the entire fraternity — only the member or members who were responsible for the drug being placed.

We ask that severe actions be taken against these individuals.

It's a sad statement for K-State and Manhattan that we can no longer go to a party or a bar with our friends and be able to trust that what we are drinking is what we ordered.

WHY WE CARE

The so-called date-rape drug has made its way to Manhattan. Let it serve as a warning to our community.

Professors caught in the act: slackers

We admire them from our meager wooden desks.

We listen to their booming voices rise from behind podiums, filling mile-long lecture halls.

These cool-headed dudes and dudettes can recite famous names, dates and milestones as easily as lyrics to a top-40 song.

I'm talking, of course, about our devoted K-State professors.

The only people who year after year could put up with questions such as "If I get a 99.9999 percent will I get an A?" or "Is that three pages, double-spaced?"

Their ability to memorize the names of 30 students in 30 seconds remains a mystery to most of us. So do their social lives.

We can only imagine that at the end of the day, while we head to Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon for $1.50 margaritas, they head home balancing towers of books on revolutions, chemical equations and theories of post-modernism.

And while we crack open a beer and pop in the timeless classic "Porky's" they curl up with a cup of herbal tea and delight in "Existentialism in a Capitalist Society."

After all, we couldn't picture our respectable professors slacking on the couch, Al Bundy style, channel surfing.

Or could we?

In my last column, I talked about why smart people watch dumb television ("Teen Gives Birth to 200-Pound Baby"). This week I bring you the ultimate proof of this phenomenon straight from the mouths of the local intelligentsia.

Yes, it's true, I got a number of K-State professors to reveal the TV program or piece of not-so-literary literature they indulge in during times of mental weakness. You know, the types of diversions they wouldn't brag about in their academic circles.

Here's a sample of the juicy confessions:

● Jonathan Holden, distinguished professor of English, likes to watch "Wheel of Fortune." "It's amusing over the lunch break."

● Bill Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, is a fan of "The Tick" and "Pinky and the Brain," a cartoon about a mouse and his sidekick who are trying to take over the world. As of yet, the dynamic duo has not succeeded. But Adams will keep us posted.

● John Daly, associate professor of history, reads "Zippy" which he said is a counter-culture comic strip from the '60s.

● Carol Pardun, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said she would not lower herself to purchasing a copy of "People" magazine. But each Thursday night, she can be found at the library, studying the publication from cover to cover.

She said she'd love to tell herself it's important to know what's going on with popular culture to better relate to her students. But the real reason is an instinctive love of gossip. Hey, we're all curious about Christie Brinkley's fourth marriage or why Dennis Rodman wants to kiss a man. Really.

● Carl Hinrichs, associate professor of speech, said he watches "The Nanny" with his wife when they're homesick for a New York accent.

● David Royse, associate professor of music education, listens to Jeff Foxworthy. "Being the rural Southerner that I am, it is really a trip back to the homeland," Royse said.

● Harald Prins, professor of anthropology, is not ashamed to admit to regular viewing of "Beavis and Butthead." But unlike his wife, who finds the show totally vulgar and idiotic, Prins said he sees past the shallowness to a very deep comment on American society. He said the show mirrors the breakdown of the family and conveys an utter lack of moral order.

"These are two unpleasant young men, with total apathy for the world around them. They live in virtual world. Their entire socialization is through television," he said.

"Maybe I'm just fooling myself," Prins adds. "But I see it as a sociological observation."

● Charles Martin, associate professor of geography, watches MTV's "Alternative Nation" and "I Dream of Jeannie," strictly for background noise while reading the paper, of course.

● John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy, occasionally watches "Jenny Jones." Exdell sees the show as an opportunity to observe what really outrages people.

He said he is fascinated by the audience response to the calamities panel members reveal. Audiences especially dislike dishonesty and double-dealing, but accept all kinds of cross sexualities, Exdell said.

● Leon Rappoport, professor of psychology, used to be a big fan of "Miami Vice." Currently, he reads Elmore Leonard, a novelist who he said writes about high-school drop-out types who fall into a life of crime.

What attracts him to this genre vs. academic literature?

"Aggression, sex and violence," he said. Why, of course!

> "Harald Prins, professor of anthropology, is not ashamed to admit to regular viewing of 'Beavis and Butthead.' Prins said he sees past the shallowness to a very deep comment on American society."

You might notice a dramatic shortage of answers from women. It seems many female professors at K-State absolutely, positively do not waste their time on anything as trivial as "Ricki Lake."

Typical answers were, "I don't own a television" or "Oh, that trashy stuff. No, I don't watch any of that."

Nope, aside from grading papers and doing research, it seems most of the female academicians I contacted spend their free time watching CNN and reading the Wall Street Journal. A&E's "Biography" is as risque as it gets.

In response to this, I can only quote the profound words of Wayne and Garth in yet another intellectual film — "Wayne's World."

"Shaaaaa right!"

no guilt

No matter where our roots lie, heritage is nothing to be ashamed of

MY

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

I celebrate my African roots and the beauty of my Native American traditions. I collect the stories of my Middle Eastern heritage and never would I wish to be anything but who I am.

Someone recently asked me if I was ashamed of myself.

It wasn't because of anything that I had done but because of who or rather, what, I am.

I am biracial. My mother is white, of Irish, English and Arabic descent. And my father is black, of African American, Native American and Italian ancestry.

In the past, I have written proudly of my many heritages. There are so many people in the world who believe that people such as myself spend most of their time in conflict about who they are and where they belong.

They think because the world tends to be cruel and preoccupied with color that I must suffer for it. They think my parents would have done better not to have fallen in love, married and had me to spare me those difficulties.

I will admit, when I was a child and my mother told me I had inherited the best of both worlds, I didn't believe her. All I saw were pointing fingers, and all I heard were words such as Oreo and half-breed.

There was a time when I felt trapped in the kind of no man's land that exists between cultures. That area between communication and understanding that keeps some from seeing me as a bridge between them and instead see me as a threat to their racial purity and their cultural survival.

I revel in who I am. I celebrate my African roots and the beauty of my Native American traditions. I collect the stories of my Middle Eastern heritage and never would I wish to be anything but who I am.

I have written many times about the fact that I refuse to be labeled as one race or another because no one label could contain all that I am. No label is big enough to encompass the joy being biracial can be.

In my many columns, however, I might have inadvertently given the wrong impression about something.

The person who asked me if I was ashamed of myself wasn't asking me if I was ashamed because I was biracial. The person asked me if I was ashamed because part of that ancestry I am so proud of is also white.

It seems in the last couple of years, being white is not a matter to be too terribly proud of. After all, many would say, whites have destroyed everything they have touched. They have swept across the world like heroes, calling themselves explorers and settlers when they were, in truth, no more than invaders.

How could I not be ashamed of the fact that in my veins courses the blood of the destroyers of countless other cultures? I am kin to those raiders who have oppressed, persecuted and exploited the bodies, the souls and the beliefs of my other ancestors.

How could I not be ashamed of that?

I tell you, I am no more ashamed of my Caucasian heritage than I am of any of the others in me. I refuse to be ashamed that not only am I black but I am also white.

To be embarrassed of that would be to deny a part of me. It would be repudiating a piece of Erin as significant as the part that makes my skin dark brown.

How can I not be proud of a culture that gave me Shakespeare and Keats? How can I not be proud to be of the same stock as those who built Notre Dame and the Leaning Tower of Pisa?

I accept with pride that I am of the same kinship as those individuals who would rather face an unknown future in a land far from their own rather than stay behind to live under oppression. Just as I accept the responsibility of learning and understanding what doing so cost so many others.

My founders have given me the gift of the blues and the Koran. They have also given me Chaucer. I know what some of my Caucasian progenitors have done. I have not forgotten old hatreds, old arguments and grudgers. They simply cannot make me hate who I am or who my people are.

The slaver and slave are at peace in me. I only hope someday they will be in all of us.

There are many of you out there who will not see my point. You will only see that I have aligned myself with oppressors and call me a traitor. To you I say, I am black, and I am white. No one race is more important. No one culture should be more celebrated than the other.

No one tribe holds supremacy in me, and I refuse to feel guilty or be ashamed for any part of who or what I am.

I have not forgotten and will not forget where or whom I came from.

No one should.

Agribusiness students prepare for contest

Dave Katzer
staff reporter

They plan market strategy for real products. They give oral and written presentations to professionals from across the country. No, they aren't corporate executives. They're students involved in the agricultural marketing team and the National Agri-Marketing Association student organization at K-State.

What the organization works for all year is the student marketing competition at the NAMA National Convention. This year the convention and competition will be April 15-17 in Nashville, Tenn.

The organization is looking for ideas for an agricultural product or service it can use for the contest.

"Once we find a suitable product, then we'll go to work defining a market plan for it," said Chris Stockebrand, NAMA president and junior in agricultural economics.

Orlen Grunewald, K-State's NAMA adviser and professor of agricultural economics, said there has been a wide range of suggestions for the club to consider.

"What the club looks for is one they can handle. We tend to look for a simple product with a well-defined need," Grunewald said.

SPEED

▶ Anyone with an agricultural product or service who needs a marketing plan can contact Orlen Grunewald in the Department of Agricultural Economics, Waters Hall, Manhattan, KS 66506-4011. The phone number is (913) 532-4443, and the fax number is (913) 532-6925.

The club is considering ideas that range from an injection for cattle that reduces liver abscesses to particle board made from wheat straw and Internet agricultural services.

The contest will consist of a written executive summary and a 20-minute oral presentation. The judges will be NAMA professionals and K-State will compete with about 30 other schools.

Of the 40 club members, only about a dozen will participate on the marketing team, due primarily to the time commitment.

"The team is a lot of work. You have to be willing to put in the hours," Grunewald said.

K-State failed to advance from the first round at last year's competition, but Dixie Theurer, NAMA vice president and sophomore in agricultural economics, said the trip was worth it.

"It was really educational. We had the chance to compare our program to the other universities. Plus, we had a really good time," Theurer said.

Stockebrand said the club aims to help the members.

"Our goal is to prepare students, and give them some experience and information as to what the real world of agribusiness is like," Stockebrand said.

Alumnus seriously injured in accident

Shane Keyser, 1996 K-State graduate, was seriously injured Monday night in a two-car accident that killed the other driver.

A vehicle traveling south on U.S. Highway 69 struck Keyser's vehicle near 151st Street in Overland Park after it crossed the center line.

"He was lucky to get out of it alive," Tim Janicke, Keyser's boss at the Kansas City Star, said.

Keyser was transported by helicopter to Overland Park Regional Medical Center and is in critical condition in the intensive-care unit. He sustained a punctured lung, broken ribs, cuts, scrapes and bruises, and might have a broken foot.

"His face is a little banged up," Janicke said.

Keyser was a photographer for the Collegian and is currently a photographer for the Kansas City Star's Johnson County Community editions.

Keyser was going to the Kansas City Star's extension bureau in Overland Park when the accident happened.

Janicke said Keyser is expected to recover.

Keyser lives in Overland Park with his wife, Kimberly, and son, Andrew.

Wildcats continue to struggle

TARA WRAY
sports writer

The K-State men's golf team shot its way to the best finish of the season at the Woodlands Intercollegiate Tournament Monday and Tuesday.

The Cats finished tied for 10th overall in the field of 18 competitors. B.J. Walter led the Cats' individual standings, tied for 16th.

Coach Mark Elliott said though he was pleased with Walter's play, the rest of the team has some catching up to do.

"I think B.J. Walter is starting to play a little bit closer to his capacity, but he's still not there yet," Elliott said. "The rest of the team is struggling."

Walter scored 75, 80 and 72 for a 227 total in three rounds of play on the par-72 course. The team's only senior, Chad Buckridge, finished 13 spots below in 29th, with a three-round total of 233.

Matt Murdoch and Brian Racette finished 46th and 60th, respectively.

Controversy reared its head in the second round. Junior Brett Sayre was disqualified when he rehit a ball that should have been played through.

"I screwed up," Elliott said. "I made the wrong ruling."

Elliott said the disqualification of Sayre, who shot a 76 in the first round and an 80 in the last, did not affect the outcome of team standings.

"We wouldn't have counted his score, anyway," he said.

Elliott said even though the Cats had their highest finish of the season at the Woodlands, he thinks they still have a lot of improving to do.

"We've got seven or eight players who are pretty good," Elliott said. "Now, it's a matter of getting them to play good in a tournament."

Below Me eliminates Phi Wacka Jacka from playoffs

JON BALMER
sports writer

In a Wednesday intramural clash of unbeaten flag-football independents, Below Me pulled out a 19-12 overtime victory over its pigskin counterparts, Phi Wacka Jacka.

The contest proved to be a match-up of two similar teams, but in the end, Below Me's defense proved to be the difference.

Before the showdown, both teams cited teamwork and having a good time as reasons for their unbeaten records. However, Phi Wacka Jacka was faced with the task of overcoming a first-ever playoff appearance.

"This is the first year we've made it this far," said Ben Schardein, Phi Wacka player and sophomore in business. "Basically, we're just happy to be here."

The intramural battle began with a sign of what would end the game — an interception. After picking off a Phi Wacka pass in the end zone, Below Me put together a series of long passes that finished with a short completion to put Below Me on top, 6-0.

> "After being together for four years, finally winning a playoff game makes this season a successful one."

> • JUSTIN GILPIN
> SENIOR IN MILLING SCIENCE

Early in the second quarter, the Phi Wacka Jackas cashed in on a short pass to tie the game at 6-6. But before halftime arrived, Below Me opened up the playbook and pulled out a long, combo pass that go ahead 12-6 before the whistle blew.

The third quarter proved to be a strictly defensive one, as both squads stifled their opposition. On the final series of the quarter, Below Me's defense stopped the Phis on downs after a long offensive drive.

On the first play of the fourth quarter, Below Me once again used the combo pass to set itself only yards away from the end zone. However, before Below Me could ice the game, Phi Wacka Jacka's defense intercepted a Below Me pass and set its offense up with great field position.

With the contest nearing an end, the Phis used a lateral-pass combo to tie the contest up at 12-12. Trying to go ahead for good, the extra-point attempt was batted down by Below Me's defense.

With the contest all knotted up, overtime was played to decide the victor. Below Me won the coin toss and opted for the chance to score first. In one quick series, they struck the end zone and completed the extra-point attempt, putting Below Me back on top, 19-12.

With one last series to even the score, Phi Wacka Jacka's offense found the wrong receiver, and Below Me's interception sealed the contest and equaled a victory for Below Me.

Both intramural teams played sound football, but in the end, only Below Me would move on in the playoffs. However, one Below Me player was already satisfied with the season.

"After being together for four years, finally winning a playoff game makes this season a successful one," Justin Gilpin, senior in milling science, said. "It's just a good incentive to graduation."

Crew mirroring national trend toward growth of women's sports

Saturday, K-State will help usher in a new era in college athletics.

The women's and men's crew teams will go to Kansas City to compete in the Head of the Kaw regatta. For the women, it will be their first race in varsity competition.

K-State is not the only school entering the brave new world of women's crew. The NCAA has officially recognized the sport and will have its first national championships this season.

"The first race of your rowing career is something you'll never forget," K-State women's crew coach Jenny Hale said. "Everybody's nervous. Nobody really knows what to expect, although they've had some of it racing at practice.

"There's a mix of excitement and pleasure and pain that is unparalleled."

MY

Dan
LEWERENZ

It's an exciting new beginning for K-State and the NCAA, and one that mirrors the change taking place in women's sports nationally.

A trend toward equality in women's sports has started with the increased participation of girls in sports at an early age and the rise of national recognition for high school and college athletes and programs. Also, the creation of the American Basketball League and Women's National Basketball League as outlets for professional women's basketball in the United States and NBC's attempt to showcase women's sports in their Olympic coverage are all part of this trend.

As usual when something new is created, there are varying views about the direction women's sports can take.

"We're going to head into that fog bank," Hale said. "You have to be able to see the shore line. This is essential, because if you lose sight of the shore, you will completely lose all sense of direction."

NBC made it clear that to them attracting a female audience meant showing what some in women's sports refer to as the pretty sports. Gymnastics, rhythmic gymnastics and diving all got lots of primetime coverage — women's basketball, volleyball, soccer and softball received considerably less.

While basketball and volleyball enthusiasts often expressed disappointment with NBC's choice, the reasons were obvious. First, basketball has a season where it gets top billing (even if women's basketball has to play second fiddle to men's in most places), while sports like gymnastics get their exposure through the Olympics. Second, the emphasis was on attracting female viewers, which NBC's demographers said liked the pretty sports, rather than sports fans, who NBC knew would be watching anyway.

> "... if you lose sight of the shore, you will completely lose all sense of direction.
> • JENNIFER HALE
> K-STATE WOMEN'S CREW COACH

The WNBA has taken another course. Knowing basketball fans are forced to suffer through the summer with no hoops, they chose to pursue the basketball enthusiast by competing with baseball. There is no attempt to identify women's basketball or women's sports fans per se, but rather to offer another option for people who see the NBA and NHL finals as the last great sporting events of the summer.

K-State and the NCAA are slowly taking third course. They're slowly developing women's sports, turning established sports into showcase events and building new traditions with up-and-coming sports-like crew.

NCAA women's basketball has already reached the point where Final Four tickets have to be sold by lottery because of the number of requests. Volleyball crowds are increasing across the country.

And the NCAA's recognition of women's crew as a varsity sport is more than just another drop in the bucket.

It's a recognition of the hard work put in by female rowers and female athletes in general during the last 100 years and more. It's the elevation of what had been a sidelight to premier status.

None of this will come easily. NBC will struggle with disgruntled viewers, the WNBA and ABL will fight for fans and sponsors, and K-State crew will probably not win its first regatta. Or its second.

But all will improve. They'll struggle to find their place while facing numerous setbacks.

And in the end, they'll win.

▶ WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Recruiting for '97 in full swing

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

What do you do when you're rebuilding a basketball program and you have nine scholarships to give?

You recruit in waves, and the first wave hit K-State's campus last weekend.

K-State's women's basketball program had four recruits on campus Friday and Saturday, the first weekend of on-campus recruiting. Among the visitors were one potential center and three forwards.

Monique Paige, a 6'2" center from Flower Mound, Texas, would be a solid addition to the Wildcat front line.

"She's a power-type of low post player," Kit Kyle, Paige's coach at Marcus High School, said. "Monique has a lot of athletic ability. It's going to be interesting to see how she develops at the Division I level, because she's really just coming into her basketball skills."

Ebony Williams, a 6' forward from Bettendorf, Iowa, is another versatile player in the mold Patterson seems to be after. Williams has the strength to play power forward, but her quickness and fluidity make her a natural at small forward.

"I'm assuming they're going to start her at the four and move her to the three," Bettendorf High School coach Lori Hatch said. "We've had 11 Division I players move through this program, and she's the best defender we've seen."

Brandi Harris, a 6' forward from Tulsa, Okla., is another prospect at the wing. Harris' coach was unavailable for comment, but Harris is considered one of the top 10 prospects in Oklahoma, a state known for producing a number of exceptional women's basketball players.

Another Texas prospect, 5'10" forward Morgen Finneran from Granbury, Texas, rounds out last week's visitors.

"Morgen is one of the most heads-up players I've coached," Leta Andrews, coach at Granbury High School, said. "She's not a really flashy player, but she's stable. She'll be there for you every practice and every game, and she's solid defense-wise."

NCAA rules prohibit K-State coach Debbie Patterson from commenting on recruits until the school has received a letter of intent. The signing period begins in November.

▶ WOMEN'S GOLF

Cats place higher than expected

JON BALMER
sports writer

The K-State women's golf team finished fourth at the Big 12 Preview in College Station, Texas, last weekend by shooting a school record 940.

The Wildcats were led by sophomore Jane Yi's ninth-place finish overall with scores of 79, 73 and 77.

"This was Jane's best college tournament by far," Coach Kristi Knight said. "She improved so much in handling herself on the course."

By finishing highly and playing smart, Yi said she believed the Cats made their mark on the competition.

"The whole team was ecstatic over the finish," Yi said. "We really woke up the other teams and let them know we came to play."

Yi's numbers, combined with freshman Carrie Chambers' scores of 82, 73 and 78, helped the Cats finish ahead of Big 12 foes Texas and Oklahoma State, which were both ranked in the Top 25. Knight said she felt the high finish instilled confidence in the team.

"At the start of the weekend, I was hoping to finish in the top nine," Knight said. "To go into the Preview and finish ahead of these teams is quite an accomplishment. This was the strongest field the team will face until the Big 12 Tournament in April."

With the quality of players involved in the tournament, Knight said she viewed the match as a chance for the Cats to learn from their competitors.

> We really woke up the other teams and let them know we came to play.
> • JANE YI
> K-STATE GOLFER

"It was a good opportunity for us to play with such top players," Knight said.

The teams fourth-place finish also helped Knight to decide who should occupy her top four spots.

These spots are filled by Chambers, Yi, junior Ann Slater and sophomore Jennifer Omohundro.

"With what these players did last weekend, they solidified themselves as the top four of our team," Knight said.

The Cats resume play this weekend at the KU Invitational in Lawrence. The field of teams participating will feature last weekend's top three finishers in Nebraska, Texas A&M and Missouri, respectively.

"These teams are definitely the class of the field," Knight said.

Yi said she also believes the Cats will fare well in KU country.

With Lawrence playing host to the inaugural Big 12 Tournament in the spring, the Cats will be able to preview the course and gain some future insight from this weekend'smatch.

However, Knight said she feels the most important task for the team now is to build off last weekend's finish and take it one tournament at a time.

"I think after the Big 12 Preview finish, the team has gained so much confidence," Knight said.

"It should continue and get better with time."

Cable channels use homepages for advertising

website review

Every week, Darin Siefkes, senior in history, and radio and television, will review various sites on the World Wide Web.

Do you know an interesting site, have a question or want to comment?

E-mail Siefkes at (wings@ksu.ksu.edu)

Every time I watch the tube, I hear about these fantastic pages that will change my life.

The networks use hours of precious commercial time to tell us about their homepages.

This week we look to see if these cable homepages are hot sites or just a smoke screen.

Discovery Channel Online (http://www.discovery.com/)

For those who occasionally like a little education before being hypnotized into la-la land, I've included this page.

It highlights one of the most diverse channels on television today.

Instead of just showing its schedule like some networks, it gives the stories online to help viewers decide which programs they would like to view.

And we are not just talking about teasers that give half a story then end with the phrase "see the rest on Tuesday at 8 p.m."

These are full stories that are entertaining and insightful.

The online schedule helps makes sense of the Discovery Channel by giving a quick rundown of what is on at each half hour.

I was disappointed, because the schedule is not cross-linked with the stories.

I guess sometimes you can't have it all.

The rest of the site is designed like a magazine.

The world section is the most entertaining.

It has stories on the various themes Discovery has on each day including Wings Thursdays, Technology Saturdays and Nature Mondays.

Once surfers click on a day of the week they are transported to a page full of stories on that subject.

This is a good page, but it still has some drawbacks.

I found some of the animation way too cheesy to be worth the bandwidth it wasted.

But overall, this is a page you can safely recommend to your friends.

USA Network (http://www.usanetwork.com/)

This week's most disappointing site is the USA Network. If you surf to find entertaining information that isn't an obvious marketing tool, you've come to the wrong place.

Though the graphics are average, I found the constant advertising annoying. There is no fun in the homepage.

To cut it short, it's a nice site to visit, but only when the rest of the Internet crashes. I just expected more from USA.

HBO (http://www.hbo.com/)

After the USA Network homepage, nearly anything looks good, even HBO.

HBO at least makes an effort to entertain the viewer, no matter how weak an effort it is.

At least cool graphics make the page interesting, and the animations are neat.

It runs contests here time to time.

If you aren't a regular HBO viewer, you aren't going to win.

I also like the Dennis Miller section.

I would like it even better if it would change from last season, though if you haven't read the jokes before they are funny.

NewsFuse: The Entertainment Hyperzine is a good section if you care what is going on in entertainment.

However, there are better gossip pages out on the Web.

Overall, this is a nice page, but there is nothing here to make surfers want to stay and hang for any length of time.

CNN Interactive (http://www.cnn.com/)

This is a site for all you news junkies.

It contains all the information you would expect from CNN with the ease you would expect from the Internet.

Graphics are clean, quick and not too glitzy. The stories are divided just like CNN Headline News.

My biggest problem with the page is users can veg in front of it like the tube.

It is easy just to keep surfing this page and watch the rest of your life fade away.

QUALCOMM
the new school of thought in wireless communications

You're on your way...

If a computer science, computer engineering, or electrical engineering degree. So now it's time to start thinking about where you will be tomorrow. Why not start on joining the company of casually attired but seriously motivated and extraordinarily skilled individuals who have made QUALCOMM the leader in digital wireless communications. We are using CDMA technology to build the next generation of wireless digital telephones and computer networks, including cellular, PCS, satellite, local loop and GlobalStar — a global telephone network of low earth orbit satellites. We also produce Eudora — the world's most popular e-mail software package.

At QUALCOMM in San Diego, CA, we make a habit of turning wild ideas into practical tools for the new age of communications. We do it in a corporate culture that respects and affirms the individual while encouraging team effort. And as the company continues to grow rapidly, your career vistas continue to expand. At QUALCOMM you will have everything you need to work well, whether it be the latest computers or the most sophisticated test equipment. You'll also have plenty of opportunities to play hard using our recreational facilities; to explore new horizons of learning through corporate and community educational institutions; and to enjoy the rich, varied social and cultural experiences that San Diego offers. So if you're looking for challenge and opportunity, look no further. If you have one of the degrees mentioned above, mail your resume (including transcripts) to College Relations, PO Box 919013, San Diego, CA 92191-9013, or fax it to (619)658-2110.

Little things.

They are everywhere, everyday. While we might not notice them, many times little things affect us in ways we don't realize.

For example, a parking ticket measuring 6 inches by 3-1/2 inches can cost a driver anywhere from $5 to $15. A click of the mouse that fits in the palm of one's hand can change a figure from 1,000,000 to one.

Seven members of the Collegian photography staff chose one hour of their day Sept. 30 to get as close as possible to the little things. Armed with one tool — closest-possible focus — photographers explored the infinite number of little things on a campus covering 664 acres of the Kansas Flint Hills.

Crawling on the ground, we turned over every rock we found interesting. Sometimes, though, we didn't have to look under the rock.

DEBATE

Peterson said although the program is an option, it is a tremendous expense and might not be the most responsible use of state dollars.

Hochhauser and Peterson agreed somewhat on certain issues, such as finding a solution to the increasing number of young people using drugs and finding a remedy for the state's water-safety problem.

But, there were other issues where the candidates drew a distinct line between their beliefs, as in the case of abortion.

"My position on abortion is survivability," Peterson said. "When the child can survive outside the mother, that's when the constitutional right to live would begin. Currently Kansas' law allows abortions up to second trimester, and I wouldn't. I feel abortion is allowable in cases of rape, incest and the health of the mother."

Hochhauser also gave her stance on abortion.

"This is one of those issues that the government restrictions in place are entirely enough," Hochhauser said.

"I am definitely in support of the freedom of women and their families and their clergy and their doctors to make this decision and there should not be additional government-imposed restrictions on a woman's right to reproductive choice.

"What Mr. Peterson is proposing is not freedom of choice, and he would impose those restrictions by the government, which I view as inappropriate."

INCREASE

for a receipt."

Pitts said price changes were consistent throughout the Union. For example, someone could not buy a drink in one area for one price and for another price somewhere else.

The only item affected by a price increase at the information booth was bottled soda, which went up five cents.

Even though Union service operating hours are reviewed each semester and may fluctuate, the labor-expense increase caused the reduction of service hours in some areas.

Copy-center hours on weekends and evenings might take a cut. Stateroom cafeteria hours have shortened in the evenings, but food options are still available in the building such as Subway and the Union Station.

The Union Bookstore has also changed. After 6 p.m. and on weekends there is no cashier on the textbook level, but purchases are still allowed through the lower-level lines.

Reductions in labor hours will also compensate for increased labor costs. Workers that lost hours were not sent away without options, however.

"It is my understanding that individuals whose hours have been reduced in the Union Station have been given the option of picking up some hours in other parts of food service," Pitts said.

"If they elect not to, that is their decision," he said.

ROBERTS

onto others.

Roberts voted against an amendment for Congressional term limits.

"I must admit and add that this Congress made some mistakes, the most notable of which was to shut down the government during the debate on the budget," Roberts said.

The shutdown aside, when historians look back to the 104th Congress, it will be regarded as the most significant one in a generation or more, Roberts said.

Addressing voter apathy, Roberts said more Americans go bowling every year than go into the voting booth.

He said more than half of U.S. citizens, upon being handed the Bill of Rights said it should not be adopted into law and fewer than one-fourth of our nation's citizens can recognize the name of their member of Congress.

When asked how to address voter apathy, Roberts said, "We could pass a bill calling for everybody to pay up on the national debt. That's about $187,000. That might get their attention."

The United States will not be able to overcome its challenges with cynicism and pessimism that breeds contempt of both the government and the governed. One solution would be to eliminate gridlock, Roberts said.

"It's not only important to increase the voter turnout. It's just as important to increase the informed voter turnout, Roberts said.

Van Halen replaces lead singer yet again

ASSOCIATED PRESS

It's a saga more worthy of a soap opera than a rock band: 11 years ago, lead singer David Lee Roth left Van Halen and was replaced by Sammy Hagar. Recently, the roles reversed with Hagar leaving after learning that Roth was secretly recording songs with Van Halen.

Then Roth, who turns 41 today, was reunited with the band at the MTV Video Awards this summer. The foursome hugged and received loud applause at the show.

At the time of the awards, Roth appeared ready to return. When asked what the change meant for his solo career, Roth said: "What solo career?"

Only now Van Halen said it had found a new lead singer: Gary Cherone of Extreme, which has had hits such as "More Than Words."

Roth acknowledges the band had only agreed to record a couple of songs and told him it isn't a sure thing.

But he said Van Halen unfairly trotted him out at the MTV Video Awards, suggesting the original band was back to stay.

"I wanted to believe it just as much as anyone else," he said.

As for Hagar, who turns 49 Sunday, he described his split with Van Halen earlier this year as "devastating, backstabbing, I-don't-get-it, real big disappointment."

Although Hagar said he harbored no ill will toward Roth, he thought the other members considered his predecessor to be their worst enemy.

"The three of the guys in the band hated him more than anyone on the planet. They wouldn't even talk to the guy. If anyone brought up the name, they would freak out," Hagar said.

GHB is not considered a controlled substance by the Drug Enforcement Agency, but the Food and Drug Administration banned the over-the-counter sale of the drug in November 1990.

Four of the 10 cases, which initiated the ban of over-the-counter sale of the drug, involved severe results when GHB was combined with alcohol, according to the website of the Cognitive Enhancement Research Institute at (www.ceri.com/feature.htm).

"GHB has been known to cause death when taken in high dosages," Spaulding said.

In the past, GHB was used in Europe as a general anesthetic, a treatment for insomnia and narcolepsy, a childbirth aid and a treatment for alcoholism among other uses, according to the Cognitive Enhancement Research Institute's website.

"GHB continues to be sold to information on legitimate laboratories and scientists for research purposes, but selling it specifically for human consumption, especially while making claims about its health benefits, is a violation of current FDA regulations and policy," according to information on the Cognitive Enhancement Research Institute's website.

Results from roofie tests expected

▪ Criminal charges possible if blood tests turn up positive for drug.

JEREMY KELLEY AND KIMBERLY HEFLING
staff writer agd news editor

Results from samples taken from a group of women who reported they might have been drugged with Rohypnol, the so-called date-rape drug, or a similar drug, GHB, will determine whether a crime has occurred.

The results will arrive early next week after the completion of tests at an independent lab, said Capt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police.

The alleged victims might have come under the influence of a drug Saturday night at a K-State fraternity party.

Doug Coffman, junior in pre-health professions, said the Interfraternity Council discussed this issue at a meeting he attended Monday night at Lucky BrewGrille.

It was brought to the attention of those in attendance that some women, all from the same sorority, were given a drug at a new-member party Saturday night. This caused them to be unconscious for nine hours.

It was also reported at the meeting that some of the women were vomiting blood, Coffman said.

Two other members of fraternities at K-State, who wished not to be identified but who were also at the IFC meeting, confirmed that this information was presented.

Barb Robel, director of Greek Affairs, said she did not wish to comment on the situation or have her name associated with the story at this time.

Lafene Health Center staff members helped treat some of the alleged victims.

Dr. Guy Smith of Lafene said several students came in last week because they thought they had ingested the drug Rohypnol.

"We treated some students last week for excessive sedation," he said. "However, he cannot point the finger at the drug and are still trying to chemically identify it."

Smith said he did not want to say what day the students came in or their sex.

Bill Arck, director of University Counseling Services, said Rohypnol has a fairly potent effect when mixed with alcohol.

"The drug is most dangerous when mixed with alcohol. It has a synergistic effect," he said. "It's not like one plus one equals two, but rather more like one plus one equals five."

Arck said the onset of Rohypnol or GHB, gamma-hydroxybutyrate, is 15-30 minutes when ingested orally. A coma caused by the drug typically lasts from one to two hours, with full recovery by eight hours.

If the drug tests from the lab reveal the women were under the influence of a drug such as Rohypnol, a joint investigation with the Riley County Police Department and the campus police will begin.

"Then we'll go back and retrace what people were doing that night and find out how they ingested such an item," Mellgren said.

Pat Bosco, dean of student life, said he could neither confirm nor deny that any organized living group was involved with the incident.

But Bosco responded. When he Senators debate specifics of bill for BSU allocations for an hour

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate spent one hour and 15 minutes debating the specifics and wording of one allocation bill Thursday night.

However, after spending such a long time debating the allocation to the Black Student Union, the Senate covered the next eight bills in 15 minutes.

There were several amendments proposed to BSU's allocation.

The primary disagreement was whether BSU's awards ceremony was a social function, which would make allocating money for it a violation of funding regulations.

Senate Chair Aubrey Abbott ruled it to be a violation, which Allocations Chair Bret Glendening appealed.

Glendening said because there was a speaker at the ceremony, it was not a violation of the regulations.

"Obviously this is a good cause, and we don't need to be axing it out of the bill," Glendening said.

The senators said they all agreed it was a good cause, but they upheld the decision of the chair, and after even more debate, they amended the section back into the bill.

This is the proper way to make exceptions to funding regulations and requires a two-thirds vote to pass the amendment.

There was dissent about whether the extensive debate was productive.

"This glorious body, Student Senate. Whatever goes on between you has nothing to do with us as an organization," Jawwad Abdulhaqq, BSU president, said. "These projects have been funded since black folks were on this campus. You need to get some consistency."

This specific project is being funded for the second year.

Some senators said they felt Abdulhaqq and the other representatives from BSU were not treated well.

"We do send a definite message out," Dorian Shager, graduate senator, said. "It's not a very warm and inviting message, and why should they put up with it?"

Others said they felt the debate was an important part of the process of legislation. Secretary Steve Weatherman said the senators should aim for perfection and not mediocrity.

"It was a good learning experience," Kelly Fink, interim director of the Office of Student Activities and Services, said. "It was good to debate."

Senate also approved a new arts and sciences senator, T.J. Schreiner, to replace Parliamentarian Patrick Carney, who had to resign his Senate seat Tuesday to become parliamentarian.

Same-sex sexual-harassment case under scrutiny in Massachusetts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — The boys-will-be-boys theory of play might have reached its outer limit at a Massachusetts lumberyard.

Inside
The laws pertaining to sexual harassment are discussed in today's editorial. The Collegian editorial board addresses the evolving face of harassment in the workplace.
● Page 4

There, according to a sexual-harassment case before the state's highest court, three men said two male supervisors constantly subjected them to raunchy comments and gestures. The company argues the case isn't sexual harassment because all the men involved are heterosexual.

Same-sex sexual harassment is an issue courts around the country have been forced to address, and they have reached conflicting conclusions that ultimately may have to be resolved by the U.S. Supreme Court.

This is the first time the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court has taken up the issue.

In 1989 and 1990, Leonid Melynchenko, James Quill and Stephen LaRochelle, all now in their early 30s, worked at a West Springfield branch of the national chain 84 Lumber Co. All three eventually quit.

The men they accused, Richard Raab and Eliasel Roque, were fired after the allegations were raised.

The employees sued the company, and a state judge awarded each $75,000 in 1993 on the grounds of sexual harassment.

Judge Daniel Ford ruled the men's sexual orientation was irrelevant and that the real issue was the "intimidating, hostile, humiliating and sexually offensive work environment."

Among other things, the employees said Raab grabbed their genitals, fondled their buttocks, exposed himself to them and asked for sexual favors. Raab announced over the lumberyard's loudspeaker that Quill had given him sexual favors, and he taunted Quill's girlfriend, according to court documents.

Two of the employees said they were so psychologically damaged they ended up in therapy.

The lumber company, which is based near Pittsburgh, said it doesn't condone such behavior, but 84 Lumber Co. would be liable for same-gender sexual harassment only if gay men had harassed heterosexual men, or vice-versa.

Jay Presser, one of the company's lawyers, said it was locker-room

Little Apple takes gold medal for barleywine concoction

KENNY WENTWORTH
staff writer

The Big 12 Barleywine brewed at the Little Apple Brewing Co. was recently awarded a gold medal for its quality at the Great American Beer Festival in Denver.

Rob Moline, head brewer of the Little Apple Brewing Co., said the beers Little Apple Brewing Co. submitted did well in the competition.

"Three out of the five beers we submitted went on to the final round, and to my knowledge this is the first gold medal any beer brewed in Kansas has received," Moline said.

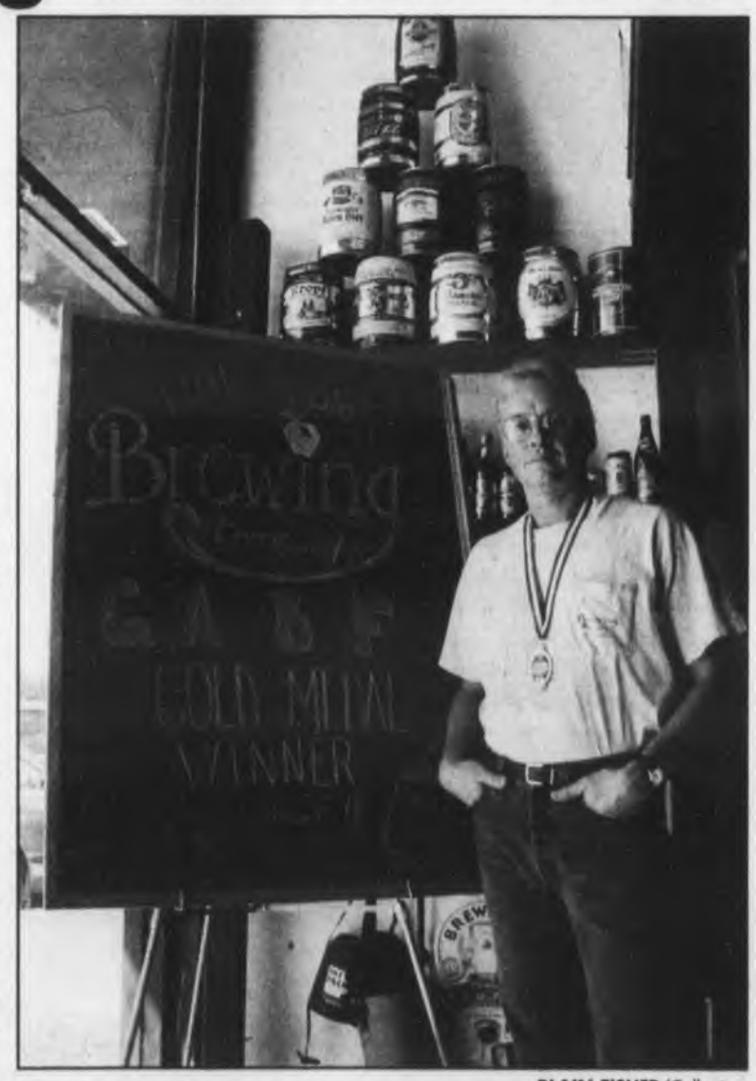
The Big 12 Barleywine competed against 40 other beers in the barleywine category.

Moline has entered the Little Apple's beers in several competitions, including the World Beer Cup, where the Big 12 Barleywine received a silver medal.

According to the Association of Brewers Beer Style Guideline, barleywine can range from tawny copper to dark brown in color and have a full body and high residual malty sweetness.

"It is a wine-like product with wine-like strength made out of barley," Moline said. "Since it is so strong, 8.5 percent by weight, it is more of a dessert beer."

The 15th annual Great American Beer Festival attracted a record-setting 30,000 beer enthusiasts at Denver's Currigan Exhibition Hall on Sept. 26-28.



During the two-day taste test, 69 international judges evaluated 1,400 entries, submitted by about 365 breweries. They then awarded a gold, silver and bronze award if the beer was worthy of that honor.

"This year's 15th-anniversary celebration was spectacular. We had a record number of beers, breweries, attendees and a huge amount of fun," Marcia Schirmer, director of the festival, said.

Since the reopening of the Little Apple Brewing Co. in April 1995, the restaurant has brewed 15 different products.

Its six mainstays of beer are Wildcat Wheat, Custer's Golden Ale, Big Red Ale, Prairie Pale Ale, Pony Express Porter and Black Angus Stout.

The Big 12 Barleywine is a specialty beer that Moline first brewed last December.

• PROFESSOR GETS NATIONAL HONOR. Dean Zollman, physics professor at K-State, has been named 1996 Professor of the Year by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Zollman, who was selected from 204 professors nationwide, received the award in Washington Thursday. Appointed to the K-State faculty in 1970, Zollman has focused his work on making physics accessible to students using film, interactive videos and CD-ROMs.

"Dean has treated the subject of teaching physics as a scholarly subject," said Jim Legg, head of the University's physics department, in a news release. "He is an outstanding teacher, but he's also giving a model to others across the nation on how we can improve our teaching style."

Zollman has written several articles on the use of interactive technology in the classroom, and has been honored for outstanding contributions to physics teaching by the American Association of Physics Teachers.

He currently holds K-State's Distinguished Teaching Scholar's Chair, a position won in a university-wide competition.

Death sentence returns to state after 20 years

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Bountaem Chanthadara is the first person in Kansas to be sentenced to death in at least 20 years, but a spokesman for the Office of the U.S. Marshal said Wednesday it is not known where Chanthadara will be held until his scheduled execution.

On Wednesday, the 23-year-old Winfield man became the first person in the state to be sentenced to death since the U.S. Supreme Court reinstated the death penalty in 1976.

After a week-long hearing in U.S. District Court, a federal jury announced it had decided Chanthadara should be sentenced to death — not life in prison. Jurors began deliberations Tuesday evening and announced a verdict around 11 a.m. Wednesday.

SPEED

▶ A U.S. District Court issued the first death sentence in Kansas since the reinstatement of the law by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1976.

Chanthadara was convicted Sept. 25 of shooting Barbara Sun, 38, to death during a 1994 robbery of her Wichita restaurant. Sun's husband and two daughters were in another room when she was killed.

Shortly after he was sentenced to death, Chanthadara seemed upbeat before U.S. District Judge Monti Belot ordered him taken to a temporary holding facility in Leavenworth.

Former U.S. Attorney Randy Rathbun put the case on a federal level when he filed charges of interfering with interstate commerce and using a firearm during a crime of violence resulting in murder. Chanthadara was convicted on both counts.

Dodge City unites to end teen violence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

DODGE CITY — Weekend shootings that left one teen-ager dead and two wounded brought thousands of people to a meeting to talk about curbing teen violence.

A funeral for 18-year-old Jason Mercado drew mourners Wednesday to the Dodge City Civic Center, where the funeral was because a church could not accommodate the crowd.

Mercado, a Dodge City High School graduate who worked at a local restaurant, and John Moses, 18, were hit Saturday night when shots were fired at a group in the parking lot of the Boot Hill museum.

Moses was seriously injured. A 14-year-old is accused in those shootings.

Another youth suffered minor injuries Sunday when someone fired from a car into the car in which the youth was riding.

An estimated 2,500 people filled the Dodge City Civic Center Tuesday night to discuss the violence at a meeting suggested by Mercado's uncle.

"Our goal is to take Dodge back," April Fowler, a cousin of Mercado, said.

"I'm sick and tired of the gangs," a woman who declined to give her name said.

Others at the meeting called for hiring more street-patrol officers, stricter enforcement of the teen-curfew ordinance and more activities to keep youngsters busy and out of trouble, Fowler said.

They bought T-shirts bearing Mercado's graduation picture and the message "Stop the Violence," and signed petitions urging the 14-year-old suspect be tried as an adult.

Interim Police Chief Ken Rogers said neither of Saturday's victims were in a gang, but the 14-year-old reportedly belongs to one called Los Chicanos Carnales.

Another member, Sakone Donesay, 14, was recently convicted of first-degree murder in the shooting death of Sedgwick County Deputy Sheriff Kevin Easter in Wichita last January.

▶ ISRAELI-ARAB CONFLICT

Opening of new prayer hall delayed temporarily

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Muslim clerics delayed opening a new prayer hall in the Al Aqsa Mosque compound Thursday, sidestepping — for now — confrontation involving the most sensitive spot in the Israeli-Arab conflict.

The decision might provide only a temporary reprieve.

Jewish extremists who want control of the compound, known to Jews as the Temple Mount, have asked the Supreme Court to block the opening of the mosque altogether. A Muslim religious leader said there would be massacre should Israel decide to interfere in plans for the prayer hall.

The site's potential for sparking violence was demonstrated last month, when Israel opened a tourist tunnel there, setting off rioting and Palestinian-Israeli battles that claimed 79 lives.

The new mosque — an underground vault known as Solomon's Stables — is part of the Al Aqsa compound, which is the third-holiest site of Islam and called the Noble Sanctuary in Arabic. It is built on the site of the Jewish Temple, destroyed by the Romans in A.D. 70. The last remnant of the Temple, the Western Wall, is Judaism's holiest shrine.

Hassan Tahboub, minister of religious affairs in Yasser Arafat's self-rule government, warned of new violence if Israel tried to stop the project.

"If they want to interfere in the mosque, there will be massacres. If they don't interfere, it will be quiet," Tahboub said Thursday.

Islamic authorities insist Israel has no say in running the holy site. But they said the new prayer hall would not open this weekend as first announced.

IN OUR OPINION

Sexual harassment is not gender specific

A company in Massachusetts says it should not be liable in a sexual harassment case because all of the individuals involved are men, and none are homosexual.

That's absurd.

Sexual harassment is sexual harassment, regardless of the genders of the parties involved. Heterosexuals can sexually harass heterosexual co-workers of the same gender just as easily as they could harass co-workers of the opposite gender.

WHY WE CARE

Sexual harassment is not limited to the opposite sex. It can happen to anyone by anyone. Our laws need to be changed to reflect that.

This is not a gay-or-straight issue. Anytime someone makes unwelcome sexual overtones to a co-worker, it should be considered sexual harassment. If someone you work with is creating an intimidating, hostile, humiliating or sexually offensive work environment for you, you should have the right to file a sexual harassment claim.

The sexual orientation and gender of those involved should be irrelevant.

That's not what the defendants in the Massachusetts case are claiming.

They argue that because all the men involved are heterosexual, it cannot be construed as sexual harassment.

Poppycock.

In this case, the supervisors were accused of making raunchy sexual comments to the employees, grabbing their genitals, fondling their buttocks and asking for sexual favors. That should be sexual harassment in anyone's book, regardless if they were just joking around or not.

A state judge agreed, but the defendants are now appealing the case to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court. Give us a break.

Welcome to the 20th century, people. This boys-will-be-boys attitude of the past won't cut it in the modern workplace. Regardless of intent or playfulness, if someone is making unwelcome sexual overtures to a co-worker, it's wrong.

And if sexual harassment laws as they are currently written are unable to cope with the current realities of our culture, the laws need to be rewritten.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

Finding the courage & strength to be yourself

Happy National Coming-Out Day! What is National Coming-Out Day? It is one day of the year set aside to celebrate the act of lesbigay people coming out of the closet.

That is not to say it is the only day of the year a person who is gay, lesbian or bisexual will come out of the closet.

National Coming-Out Day is simply a day of celebrating the courage, love and humanity evident in the act of coming out.

Many lesbigay people come out for different reasons.

First, coming out is an act of visibility thereby dispelling the myth that there are really not very many lesbigay people. Second, it can provide an opportunity to dispel false stereotypes others might have about lesbigay persons.

Third, coming out of the closet allows relationships with loved ones to be closer, more genuine and honest. Fourth, many non-heterosexuals identify as gay, lesbian and bisexual for reasons each define, determine and come to an understanding about for ourselves.

Coming out is an act of self-determination.

I have known since the age of 17 that I love women. It took me five years of knowing I was a lesbian to muster up the courage to share this fact of nature with another human being.

The first person I came out to was my best friend. I had given coming out to her a lot of thought. I mean a lot of thought, years of thought. Finally, I decided to do it.

But I was still so scared that I could not make myself say the words. I was struggling from all the internalized homophobia I had picked up from this supposedly free and enlightened society. I was so frightened I couldn't even come out to my best friend in person.

So with trembling hands, I wrote her a letter and handed it to her on my way to class.

To this day, she still has that letter, and occasionally, she will pull it out and read it to me.

I laugh and squeal — now — at how scared and alone I felt then, especially in comparison to the self-confidence and self-love that I feel today, three years later.

I have come to learn that I am not alone.

In fact, I am in great company. I am not only surrounded by a very caring and supportive lesbigay community, but there are also many lesbigay leaders, thinkers, singers, writers, comedians, teachers — the list goes on and on — that I can look up to as great role models.

Now, I tremble when thinking of other gay, lesbian and bisexual people who are struggling to find the courage and strength to come out of the closet.

My memories of what it was like to first come out of the closet, the need to learn about myself and others like me, and my drive to help others has sparked my involvement in K-State's Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society (bgls@ksu.edu).

I have taken this opportunity to come out to you, my K-State family. I have spent five of the most challenging and rewarding years of my life at this University.

I have a loyalty to K-State that I could not begin to explain and am just beginning to understand.

I have grown with you, my K-State family, and feel it is important to our relationship that you know I am lesbian. I have lived in our residence halls. I have exercised in our Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

I have taken many, many of our classes. I have studied in Farrell Library. I have been appalled by campus crime, and disturbed by the never-ending parking problem.

I have struggled as many of you, balancing my schedule of classes and work. I am your student, resident, employee, sister, teacher, tutor, classmate and friend.

And I am a lesbian. I love women. I connect with women. I feel spiritually connected, emotionally bonded, mentally engaged, and yes, sexually attracted to women.

This is a simple fact of nature. Now, this is not to say that I feel all of these things for ALL women, nor is it to say that I dislike or hate men.

I am simply saying I am a lesbian, an invisible minority, and I am coming out to you, so that we might have a more honest exchange with one another.

Since I have found the courage and strength to come out of the closet and to teach myself about lesbigay people, my people, I now understand that we come from all walks of life: all classes, all racial and ethnic variations, all ages, all physical abilities and all religions.

I understand it is essential for us to come out to ourselves and to others.

Happy National Coming-Out Day!

the dream

Diversity depends on more than gender, race and ethnicity. We should look for diversity in ideas, too.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

MY

Jeremy STEPHENS

Let me begin by saying that I am not a member of any special interest group, and I do not subscribe to any group's beliefs.

I am an individual with a particular set of ideas and beliefs that cannot be represented by another individual's organization.

I say this to preface what will appear in the rest of the column because the topic is highly sensitive to some who will read this column, and I do not want these words to be taken in an impulsive manner.

I only ask that you consider what I am saying before you label me.

The recent campus event of Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week seems to imply this campus has problems with harmonizing racial and ethnic differences.

Am I not seeing something that I should?

It appears some people are wondering whether this campus is diverse enough to provide an education for the real world.

This statement makes two assumptions: Diversity can be measured by examining the racial or gender composition of this University, and diversity defined in this fashion somehow ensures success.

If diversity is measured simply by counting minorities or women, we are no better off than if we were discriminating on that basis, for such counting cannot occur without considering a person's skin color or sex, precisely what most people claim they are trying to prevent.

In his "I have a dream" speech, one of Martin Luther King Jr.'s key points was that colorblindness was among the highest priorities.

When diversity is measured by skin color, it mocks exactly what King was trying to accomplish when he said we should not be judged by our skin color, but on the content of our character. Which leads us to what diversity is.

Diversity is the presence of a wide range of ideas and beliefs, without regard to the demographic characteristics of the person who has that world view.

Simply having a certain percentage of those with different characteristics does not constitute diversity, because ideas and beliefs are what make people different.

If you have an equal number of every race under the sun represented, but they all think the same way, you do not have diversity. In other words, to use a quote I once saw in a psychology class, "Where all think alike, there is not much thought."

Do not construe this to mean minorities should not or are unable to teach at an institution of higher learning. I have been instructed by and have become acquainted with minority members of our faculty and find that their character is beyond reproach, and their instruction is more than adequate.

Many in education have called for placing high priorities on diversity, in a demographic sense, and multicultural training for our teachers and argue that these concepts should be taught in the classroom.

Often, these concepts have been fought for with religious fervor and propose to give peace and harmony between people, much like a religion.

If we are truly intent on removing religion from all functions of the state, let us keep these religions in the home, where parents can instruct their children in the way they should go.

I am not advocating discriminatory policies, only that as of yet, freedom of thought and speech are still protected in this country. Multiculturalism prevents free thought by silencing certain ideas because they originated in a certain culture or highlighting other ideas because of their cultural origins.

Today, I question the direction in which civil rights organizations are heading, because equality has been achieved according to the law, which was their original goal. All American citizens are provided the same rights according to the law, and further legislation will begin to stack the deck against one group.

I do not question the original need for the movement before the law was equally applied, and I deeply respect King for two reasons.

He knew what he believed and why, and secondly, he did not repay those who harmed him with the same deeds. However, the latter concept does not govern those leading the movement today.

As time has passed, laws have been passed and court decisions have been made that are not in the interest of justice, but are vengeful in nature.

These practices are no better than the segregation that once marred this country. It was my understanding that the purpose of the civil-rights movement was to level the playing field.

Let's not make it uneven again for the sake of fairness. It is my hope that King's dream of making the quality of a person's character mean the most will become a reality.

Reader chuckles at policy

Editor,

When I heard the Collegian was not printing letters concerning political candidates, I chuckled, thinking to myself this was something truly asinine that the editorial elite at the Collegian would dream up.

In your attempt to look unbiased, which you aren't, you have successfully limited the students' ability to make their opinions known.

Your blatant censorship gives you the almighty power to decide what opinions we see. Instead of ensuring that all side of the story are presented, you have decided that no stories are presented. You have decided that no story will be printed.

I expected on the opinion page for Republicans to drool about Bob Dole and Sam Brownback. I expect for Democrats to defend President Clinton and support Jill Docking.

And, I expect people who hate politics to be apathetic and blast the entire system. If all sides are shown, there should be no problem. You obviously found this to be too much work.

There are a lot of candidates out there who deserve to be rolled over the coals in a local newspaper, and without it they might get away with the stupid things they do.

Don't be so hard on the players

Editor,

It is really a shame that our student fans cannot have the same class our football program enjoys. To boo your quarterback shows a complete lack of class.

For all of the work that has gone into making the program what it is today, he deserves much better.

Next time you blow an exam, bring it to the game. We will put it on the JumboTron and let 40,000 people boo you for your efforts.

Please, let's give our team the full support of all of us.

Manhattan lesbigay community supports youth in coming out

Editor,

Today is National Coming-Out Day.

So here I am doing what I know and hope so many other people in the lesbigay community all over the United States are doing — coming out, speaking out and having a great time doing it.

Only, for me, it is a little more challenging.

You see, I'm pretty young — a teenager in fact.

Now, I know some of you are going to say, "It's just a phase he's going through," or "Everyone is confused sometimes. He'll grow out of it."

But I don't think so. I've been out of the closet to my close friends and family since I was 16.

In this past year and a half, I've been able to find friendship, support and understanding in the lesbigay community in Manhattan.

This has come through the wonderful people in the Flint Hills Alliance and K-State's Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian Society. I've also found acceptance in the Metropolitan Community Church here in town.

I know how important this acceptance and support can be.

Some studies show that as many as two in 20 or more high-school students could be homosexual. So where are all these gay youths?

Simple. Like so many others in the community, they are in the closet. Why? The reasons might vary, but a lot of it boils down to fear.

We might fear not being accepted by our classmates. We might fear being kicked out of our homes. We might fear being physically or emotionally hurt, or fear losing our jobs.

Just like many gay youths, many adults are not out either. It is this state of invisibility that can be so harmful to the lesbigay community.

And it can be especially harmful to young people like myself, who feel that we can learn so much from older gays, lesbians and bisexuals.

We could benefit from their wisdom, knowledge and experience.

When we have the courage to come out to our friends, families, classmates and coworkers, we give the lesbigay community a face, a name and a personality.

We are no longer one of THOSE people, but people who are part of a diverse community called America.

And yes, I know if every lesbigay youth and adult came out today, it would not solve all our problems.

There would still be those people who would try to discriminate against and be mean to us.

But I feel it would be a step in the right direction toward a better world for everyone. And I would have more friends.

Coming out first to myself and then to my friends and family was one of the best things I've ever done. I have found acceptance and friendship and a little more inner strength. I can celebrate my uniqueness, and delight in feeling whole. I hope that more people will find the courage to come out.

Fans, not players, performed poorly at Nebraska game

Editor,

I am writing to express my disappointment with the football game against Nebraska last Saturday, and it is not the players with whom I am disappointed. I am an alumna of K-State, and I am usually proud of that.

At the game, however, I was not proud at all. As a matter of fact, I was embarrassed to be a K-State grad. I live in Nebraska, and so I was looking forward to the match-up between the two schools, especially because the two coaches have a strong mutual respect.

Even among crowds of students, I was never verbally attacked. And as far as I know, the same can be said for the K-State team. Unfortunately, the K-State students did not show that same respect for Nebraska.

They were rude and showed absolutely zero class. It was bad enough to boo the whole team and their mascots before the game and after halftime, but it was even worse to continually boo DeAngelo Evans.

Not only is it childish to dislike someone simply because he chose not to stay in Kansas, but booing him made him work harder to win. The Nebraska coaches even said they needed to have the Nebraska fans boo him during games, because it really energized him.

In addition, as if the lack of respect for Nebraska wasn't enough, I was angered by the lack of respect shown for our own team — especially our quarterback.

I don't care how upset you are with a player on your team, you should never blatantly ridicule him while he is on the field or even off it.

If you support your team, you support it whether it wins or loses. Saturday's performance showed absolutely no class whatsoever on the part of our student body.

True K-State fans have class. They were around when the Cats weren't having winning seasons, and they will continue to support the team.

The type of fans I saw in the student section last weekend were not the kind K-State needs. We need fans who are loyal to the school and its programs — not ones who turn on their own.

Reader opposes Collegian policy

Editor,

I oppose the decision made by the Collegian editorial board that the Collegian should not publish opinion page articles or letters to the editor concerning candidates.

While it doesn't technically restrict free speech, it removes a valuable platform for discussion of political views.

I may not agree with everything everyone will express on that platform, but I still prefer to decide for myself what information I will believe and what I won't believe. The more information I get the easier that becomes, and unfortunately the official statements of the candidates often don't help much.

Let's face it. Your planned page listing the candidates' position on a number of issues is going to be opinionated. In politics it is impossible to write a completely unbiased article.

In fact, the only subjects I can possibly imagine a completely unbiased article in are natural sciences or mathematics. And when you remove the possibility for letters to the editor and opinion articles to point out different views, you're withholding information.

Again, some of the information you're withholding will be wrong, but some of it may be correct. In withholding it, you are treating your readers like children. You are implying we cannot understand that a page that says opinion on top of it will feature — guess what? Opinions.

Endorsements deflate credibility

Editor,

I agree with the Collegian's policy against editorial endorsement of political parties or candidates. I believe it deflates the credibility of your columnists if they use their weekly access to the printed page as a bully pulpit to bash political parties or candidates. Frankly, despite his complaints, Lach Franquemont was the most frequent offender and his anti-Republican rantings tarnished his credibility.

Men opening doors for women is not sexism; it shows character

Editor,

This is in response to Page Getz's column "Advocating Equality." Getz wrote, "If you want to do a woman a favor, don't open a door for her."

She continued with, "If you're only opening doors for women, why wouldn't you open a door for a man?" I would agree with this to some extent; however, if one was on a date with a woman and a meaningful relationship had not yet been built, he (or she) might open the door for his date as a way to show politeness. This act is a way for him to show his character.

In nature, humans have four stages in life. These are birth, growth, reproduction and death. This sexism is caused by only one of these stages: reproduction.

In this area, women and men are not and never will be equal. That is not to say men are better than women, or vice versa. As humans, we have this natural desire to reproduce. Within the animal kingdom, humans are the most meticulous when it comes to choosing their mates.

To some this could be visual appearance or external beauty, while to others it is what's inside that matters. So by opening a car door for a woman, the man is simply communicating his character.

On a date, who usually drives, the man or the woman? Wouldn't this fit into Getz's definition of sexism?

Let's pretend a woman takes a man out on a date in her car, and she drives.

Let's say that after the movie, or whatever events the couple had partaken in, the two go to the woman's car. Let's pretend the woman opened the door for the man. Would this be considered reverse sexism?

Basically, these superficial gestures are a way for a man to show his date that he is not afraid to go out of his way for her. And isn't that what a relationship is all about — going out of your way for your mate?

Support Cats; don't sell tickets

Editor,

I agree strongly with the sports column in Tuesday's paper. Selling your student tickets to make a few dollars is not only chicken-shit, but also wrong, especially to those who sold their tickets for as much as $200.

I truly hope the students got the message Saturday when seeing small pockets of Nebraska fans whooping it up for their team IN OUR STUDENT SECTION.

Everybody knows the team did not play up to its potential, not by a long shot. You can bet the Cats will be ready for the Tigers this Saturday and the Aggies next week. When the poor Sooners come to visit in a few weeks, let's show everybody what real Wildcat fans are like.

Rouletter Dates,

You may hear our yell coming across the plains, we are going to party and we are taking Hell by the reins. For on October 12, you'll be glad to hear it's back again for its 58th year. The whiskey is uncorked, and we've iced down the beer just to rear one hell of a party that everyone will fear. Thirteen hundred brothers will declare, "It's time to don this cowboy's hat and sprout that wild-ass hair." For some of our best, this one will be their last. So we'll make damn sure it lives up to the past. So jump in some boots and throw on your hat, this party only starts at 1919 Platt. This party is not for the weak or distressed but rather for those able and willing to impress. We would turn in our grave before dancing a line, but swinging and stepping twice you will surely find. It's more than a barn party, it's a hell of a lot better. It's the boots, the beer, the brothers together. It's the best damn party known as Rouletter. So prepare to get rowdy and rearing to go; Because no one parties like Alpha Gamma Rho!

Museum's namesake's roots deep in K-State history

STORIES BY RUSSELL FORTMEYER • GRAPHIC BY JUSTIN STAHLMAN • PHOTOS BY CARY CONOVER

THE CURVED sidewalk on the north side of the museum leads into the second floor of the museum where the galleries are located. The first floor is reserved for administrative office space.

In 1939, the K-State Student Union did not exist.

The Collegian was running ads for Chesterfield Cigarettes and Parker Vacumatic Pens.

The fountain at Aggieville Palace was brand-new.

And Marianna Kistler was starring as Cecily Harrington in the K-State Theatre play, "Love From a Stranger."

That's Kistler, as in Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

The completion of an art museum in her name means much more than another campus building.

Marianna Beach's life is connected to K-State much in the same way John Steuart Curry's paintings in the art collection are connected to the Kansas landscape.

It's as if they are one and the same.

Beach began her freshman year at K-State in 1937 in the school of journalism, graduating in 1941 with a degree in industrial journalism.

Her four years at K-State were busy ones. Beach was involved in the club Dynamis, Enchiladas (the national honorary dancing organization), the national journalists' professional group Theta Sigma Phi, the Pi Beta Phi sorority, French Club, YWCA, Manhattan Theater and as a Royal Purple Beauty Queen attendant.

In 1939, Beach was the biggest gossip on campus while she wrote her biweekly Collegian column, "My Say by Eleanaw" — a riff on Eleanor Roosevelt's newspaper column.

How did she get her scoop?

"Lots of friends," Beach said.

Beach hadn't met her husband, Ross, at the time she wrote her column, so nothing concerning her love life ever surfaced on the pages of the Collegian.

"I can imagine those columns would make me squirm," she said. "Youth is something. It's nice to outgrow sometimes."

During the 1939-40 theater season, Beach performed roles in both "Stranger" and as the Widow Weeks in a Jesse James saga, "Missouri Legend."

Beach said she got her interest in theater from her mother, who was a drama major in college and gave elocution lessons at home.

It wasn't until second semester when young Marianna met Ross Beach, a senior in chemical engineering at K-State.

Marianna remembers their first date as if it were yesterday, although it was actually February 9, 1940.

"Our first date was a book review of 'Mein Kampf' by Adolf Hitler given by one of my favorite high-school professors," Beach said.

Marianna said she and Ross went to get a Coke after the lecture and played Russ Morgan's "Does Your Heart Beat for Me" on the jukebox — which, of course, became their song.

Ross Beach said, "I only had a date with one other female after that, and I still got her 56 years later."

The in-spot for Ross and Marianna to hang out in 1940 was the Canteen, a sort of malt shop that, ironically, was across Anderson Avenue and a bit west of the site of the museum. This was where they first met each other.

After Ross graduated, Marianna had one more year to finish her major.

"I was working in western Kansas, building pipelines," Ross said. "That was a pretty tough time during the Depression."

Luckily for Marianna, her younger brother was a freshman at K-State, so he filled in as her escort.

"Ross came down when he could, but, boy, that little brother was nice to have," Marianna said.

After she graduated in May 1941, Ross and Marianna were married on June 3, 1941.

Years later, the Beaches have taken several cruises just to hear Russ Morgan's son's continuation of his father's band play on cruise liners and to hear their song.

"We're very sentimental," Marianna said.

So sentimental that when Ruth Ann Wefald asked the Beaches for a lead gift for a new art museum, Ross Beach was more than delighted to respond. How he responded is, perhaps, one of the most romantic stories of how an art museum came to be.

The story began while Marianna was serving on a fundraising committee for the art museum.

One day, when Ross and Marianna were dressing, Marianna asked Ross if he knew of some foundations that would be willing to make a sizable donation to the museum project.

Marianna said Ross responded by saying, "I know, I'll give the money as an anniversary gift to you."

K-State's new museum isn't the only support the Beaches have given to the arts and to other Kansas institutions. They have been supportive of a natural history museum in Hays and an arts center in Marianna's hometown of Lincoln.

It wasn't until Marianna moved from Lincoln to Manhattan her sophomore year in high school that she began to fully appreciate art. She said her father moved his family to Manhattan because he couldn't afford to send his children to college

Museum provides home for art gallery

Although it took nearly a century, K-State's first art museum will open its doors to an art-hungry public on Sunday.

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art will house the K-State Art Collection, which has been in existence since professor of art John Helm began the collection in the 1920s.

There has always been a drive for a building to house the collection, but until Ruth Ann Wefald came to campus in 1986, no serious efforts had ever reached the construction phase.

"I'm really ecstatic," Ruth Ann Wefald said. "After 10 years of hard work, it's finally here. It's a proud day for K-State."

It hasn't come without a hitch for Wefald, because a number of notable paintings have been hanging in the president's house and office for years, not to mention in the K-State Student Union.

"We're all so delighted that bare walls are the least of my worries," Wefald said. "This beautiful art collection will finally have a home."

Its home is a somewhat controversial building on the extreme southeast corner of campus, forming an arts cluster with McCain Auditorium and Nichols Hall. The architect is Arthur Andersson, of Moore Andersson Architects in Austin, Texas.

Nelson Britt, director of the Beach Art Museum, said the building, inside and out, is a piece of art, and the community and campus will respond.

"I think the architect did a considerable job," Britt said.

The Beach was budgeted at $5.8 million but has been completed at a cost of nearly $6.3 million, Britt said.

Britt said it is not unusual for museum projects similar to the art museum to be over budget.

The original opening of the Beach Art Museum was to be April 1996 but was postponed until Sunday due to construction delays.

The building houses the K-State art collection, which was established and is supplemented by funds raised by the Friends of Art, established by John Helm.

Wefald's main role with the art museum has been as president of the Friends of Art. The group raises money for the purchase of new art, with 15 percent of the funds going to the maintenance of the permanent collection.

Wefald said memberships and donations to the Friends have increased since construction began on the Beach Art Museum.

The Friends' most recent gift to the collection was a John Steuart Curry painting — to be unveiled with the opening of the Beach, which was purchased in

K-State looks to turn things around in Missouri

SHANE MCCORMICK
staff writer

K-State will look to turn things around Saturday, as it travels to Columbia to face the Missouri Tigers (2-3, 0-2).

The Wildcats are in search of a victory after a 39-3 drumming to the Nebraska Cornhuskers. But looking for a victory after a big loss to Nebraska isn't something new for the Cats.

Last season, the Cats went into Lincoln, Neb., sitting at 6-0 and were soundly beaten 49-25. The following week, the Wildcats thumped Kansas at home 41-7.

"We have been able to put bad games behind us and move on," Coach Bill Snyder said. "The coaches and the players have always been able to respond well."

But this time, the Cats won't have the luxury of playing at home after a big loss. They will be traveling to Faurot Field, a place that hasn't been too kind to K-State.

Missouri leads the series in Columbia 26-12-3. In 1994, it took a last minute pass deflection by freshman defensive back Chris Canty to preserve a 21-18 Cat victory.

"They have always played us tough, especially at their place," senior wide receiver Kevin Lockett said.

The Tigers will provide a different look on offense than in years past. One big change will be at the quarterback position, where the Tigers will probably rotate two players.

The Cats should expect to see sophomore signal-callers Corby Jones and Kent Skornia.

Skornia came into the second quarter of the Missouri vs. SMU game when Jones went down with a bruised hip.

Skornia logged career highs with 174 yards passing and two touchdowns in a 27-26 victory.

Missouri head coach Larry Smith said he expects Jones to play against the Cats.

"He has a hip pointer, which some people respond differently to," Smith said. "It usually takes a couple of days to heal. We will be able to pad that area up. That is why I feel strongly that he will play."

When Jones is in the game, the Cats can expect to see a lot of the option.

Jones has rushed 22 times for 87 yards this season, but has only completed 49 percent of his passes.

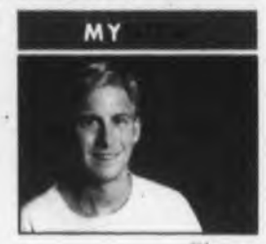
"The option game is very instrumental in their offensive package," Snyder said. "They have some very athletic people on the offensive side of the ball."

Skornia, on the other hand, is the pass-prone quarterback for the Tigers. He has completed more than 60 percent of his passes for four touchdowns.

Against SMU, he completed bombs of 55 yards and 31 yards.

But Jones is not the only Tiger battling injuries. Smith said he is also concerned about the health of linebacker Joe Love and free safety DeMontie Cross.

"Joe and DeMontie are going to be playing hurt, that is no secret," Smith said. "Last year when we played them, we had a healthy Love and Cross. Our defense played outstanding. Now, our biggest concern is health."



Passing on Phillips might have been best for NFL Rams

Teams passed on Lawrence Phillips on draft day last spring.

They were too worried about the negative public views of him and his market value. Phillips was supposed to be one of the best athletes in the draft. But because of an off-field incident, he was passed over.

Some draft experts said teams were crazy to pass on a franchise running back like Phillips.

Others said it was a good move to pass on Phillips and take another steady, solid player. Phillips was tagged as a bomb that could go off at any time.

Shane McCORMICK

But on draft day, one team decided to take a risk on Phillips.

The St. Louis Rams traded up, into the Washington Redskins spot, and drafted Lawrence Phillips to be their franchise back.

The Rams were so confident in Phillips' ability that they released Jerome Bettis.

They also had to trade standout defensive lineman Sean Gilbert to the Redskins.

But all of those moves would be justified. They thought Phillips would be a 1,000-yard rusher his first season and lead them to success.

More importantly, Phillips would be a standout citizen in St. Louis, and there would be no more off-field incidents during the season.

Well, they were about half right.

Yes, so far this football season Phillips has behaved himself. He had a little incident during the summer but nothing distracting during the young NFL season.

Phillips has held up his part of the bargain off the field.

But where he has dropped the ball has been on the field. Phillips just hasn't proven he was worth the risk the Rams took. He has not been performing on the field this season.

Through five games, Phillips has rushed for only 136 yards. He is averaging a pathetic 2.3 yards from scrimmage and has not scored a touchdown since the opening game of the season.

Some might argue that Phillips has no offensive line to run behind. They are not giving him the holes he needs.

For that argument, I say take a look at Phillips' running mate, Harold Green.

Green has rushed for 130 yards so far this season. But he has done it on 30 fewer carries. Green is averaging a respectable 4.5 yards a carry. Green has also established himself as the Rams' second-leading wide receiver.

All of this has vaulted Green into the starting lineup, demoting Phillips to a second-string running back.

Now let's take a look at what the Rams gave up for Phillips. The two main players the Rams got rid of were Gilbert and Bettis.

So far this season, Gilbert has recorded 37 tackles, 20 of which are solo tackles. He has also recorded three sacks. He has been a menace on the defensive front.

The Pittsburgh Steelers grabbed Bettis in the off-season in a hurry. Through five games, Bettis is one of the top backs in the league, rushing for 524 yards and four touchdowns. He is averaging 4.7 yards a game.

Both Bettis and Gilbert have led their respected teams to a 4-1 record and first place in their divisions.

Phillips on the other hand, has led his team to a 1-4 record. I know the Rams' terrible record cannot entirely fall on Phillips, but the fact is, Phillips is not doing the job the Rams expected.

Maybe in time Phillips will develop into the back everyone expects him to be. Maybe he is just a rookie having some trouble getting used to the system.

But maybe Phillips just isn't as good as he was publicized to be. Other teams passed on Phillips. Everyone thought it was because of his off-field incidents.

But maybe those teams knew something about his on-field abilities the Rams didn't.

Crew team seeks stable race, teamwork at competition

DAN LEWERENZ
staff writer

K-State's newest varsity sport officially kicks off Saturday when the Wildcat women's crew team goes to the Kansas City Rowing Club for the Head of the Kaw race.

Although winning is always a goal, Coach Jenny Hale said there are more important considerations going into the first race of the season.

"I'd like to not have any major problems, and I'd like them to have a good stable race," Hale said. "What we want to be walking away from this race with is to be able to pull hard and know that we are working together."

Not terribly lofty goals, but appropriate given the circumstances. Few of K-State's rowers have experience on the water, so in most of the early practices, four members of a boat would row while the other four steadied the boat. Tuesday was the first day Hale had all eight people in a boat row.

But the lack of experience hasn't discouraged the rowers.

"I think we'll be ready by Friday," Sara Swan, sophomore in public relations, said. "We've got four days to practice with eights, so we'll be OK."

Kimble Hruby, senior in horticulture, said the focus on rowing as a team will help the Cats.

"So far we've been working on rowing as a team, thinking about ourselves not as individuals, but as a unit," Hruby said.

The competition at Head of the Kaw will also be tougher than what the Cats will face in duals next spring. As an open competition, K-State's varsity crew will compete against other college varsity and club teams and local and regional rowing clubs.

"Some of our former club people don't qualify as novice rowers," Hale said. "They'll be boated as open and they might have to go up against masters boats."

The race will also be K-State's first time out on a river. The Wildcats practice on Tuttle Creek Reservoir, and Hale said river rowing has some differences.

"It changes if there is a good current," she said. "There's plenty of current, and there's a lot of other obstacles to get used to. They'll get to practice their steering."

But practice and experience are what K-State needs to become competitive, and the Cats will get both in Kansas City.

"The first race of your rowing career is something you'll never forget," Hale said. "Everybody's nervous. Nobody really knows what to expect, although they've had some of it racing at practice.

"There's a mix of excitement and pleasure and pain that is unparalleled."

Not-as-strong field could benefit golf team

he K-State women's golf team continues Big 12 play this weekend at the Marilynn Smith Invitational in Lawrence. With little time to savor last weekend's fourth-place finish at the Big 12 Preview, the Cats hope to continue their recent success.

"The field at this weekend's tournament is not as strong as last week," Coach Kristi Knight said. "But there are still many teams that will make it a competitive match."

The Cats will see familiar foes in Nebraska, Missouri and Texas A&M, which also played at last weekend's Preview. Also, state bragging rights will be up for grabs with Kansas and Wichita State participating. Knight said this would add to the intensity level this weekend.

"We've got a two-tournament win streak against the Jayhawks, and we've never beaten Wichita State, so it would be nice to accomplish these goals within state borders," Knight said.

> "I've heard it's a very good course, so I don't think it will be a problem. I have high confidence in our team."
> • CARRIE CHAMBERS
> FRESHMAN GOLFER

Another factor prevalent to the rivalry is recruiting. Knight said she felt a good showing against these Sunflower state foes would boost K-State's recruiting efforts.

"Any time you play well against local rivals, your recruiting is helped greatly," Knight said.

The course itself adds to these elements. Many of the K-State golfers have never played the course before, which might create an added challenge. Regardless, one member remains optimistic about the task.

"I've heard it's a very good course, so I don't think it will be a problem," freshman Carrie Chambers said. "I have high confidence in our team."

With a third consecutive weekend tournament waiting after KU, the Cats will have little time to rest. However, Knight sees this as a chance to build on current success.

"A whole lot doesn't need to be said to the team to build up motivation," Knight said. "They're still excited and pumped up, so we just need to keep the ball rolling."

National ranking determines how well team performs

staff writer

The K-State volleyball team entered the AVCA Top 25 Poll this week at No. 23, the first time in school history. The Cats will put their ranking up against Big 12 foes Baylor and Texas Tech Friday and Saturday.

Wildcat coach Jim Moore said the ranking was a gauge to determine how well the team is performing.

"The biggest thing is that we need to keep it," Moore said. "Doesn't make us play any different. It's just a recognition thing. It tells us that we're playing well and if we drop out it will mean we're not playing well."

K-State will put its 15-2, 3-1 record up against Baylor Friday. The Bears are 13-5, 2-2 with conference wins against Missouri and Iowa State.

"The program has struggled in the past," Moore said. "They are under a new coach, and now they're a solid, different team. We'll have to play well to beat them, even though they're in a bit of a rebuilding stage."

The Wildcats will end the trip at Texas Tech Saturday. Tech carries a 15-2, 2-2 record.

Moore said Texas Tech was one of the toughest teams in the conference.

"Tech has been ranked all season long," Moore said. "The volleyball poll has a tradition of being accurate as to how good a team really is."

K-State is coming off a 3-0 win against Oklahoma Oct. 4. Moore said the game was one of the best played by K-State's squad all season long.

"For the first time since I've been here we took a good team out of what they wanted to do," Moore said. "It felt real good to be able to accomplish that. We still need to be able to block and play defense all the time."

Breast cancer brings awareness to campus

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Breast cancer is the second-leading cause of death among women in the United States. October is Breast Health Month, and Lafene Health Center is busy educating K-State women.

According to the American Cancer Society's "Facts and Figures: 1994," by age 85, one in eight women will be diagnosed with breast cancer.

Every woman is at risk of getting breast cancer, and there is no prevention. Treatment is available when it is found early enough.

A breast self-examination is one way for K-State women to detect early signs of cancer.

"Our main emphasis with college students is to get them used to doing a self-breast exam," said Cathie Barry, director of nursing at Lafene. "It's part of a wellness approach to life. That way they will be able to tell if there is something abnormal there."

Incidences of cancer are not high among college-age women, but Barry said the nurses at Lafene have seen cases of malignant tumors that were diagnosed as cancer.

Malignant tumors are cancerous, and benign tumors are non-cancerous. According to a pamphlet given out by Lafene, 95 percent of tumors diagnosed as malignant are found by women performing breast self-examinations.

Even though all women are at risk of getting breast cancer, there are certain categories of women who are at a higher risk. These are women older than 40 and women who have a family history of breast cancer.

"If you have a mother or sister that developed breast cancer before the age of 50, the higher your chances are of getting cancer. Ten years prior to the onset of cancer in that family member, the young woman should start getting mammograms done," Barry said.

Women from the ages of 20 to 40 should perform self-examinations once a month and supplement them with a mammogram by a professional practitioner every three years.

Scientists have just begun research on finding the key gene that might cause breast cancer. The gene normally suppresses the growth of tumors and has been reported missing in a number of different types of cancers.

Scientists estimate this tumor-suppressing gene might be implemented in as many as 60 percent of breast-cancer cases.

If a woman discovers a lump while doing BSE, she should contact her health-care professional. If the tumor is diagnosed as malignant, several treatments may be administered.

A lumpectomy is a procedure in which the tumor and 1-2 centimeters of the surrounding area are surgically removed and followed by radiation.

Another procedure is called a mastectomy. In a mastectomy, all or part of the breast is removed, and radiation therapy follows.

Monthly exam

In the shower
Raise one arm. With fingers flat, touch every part of each breast, gently feeling for a lump or thickening. Use your right hand to examine your left breast, your left hand for your right breast.

In front of a mirror
With arms at your sides, then raised above your head, look carefully for changes in the size and contour of each breast. Look for dimpling or changes in skin texture. Squeze both nipples and look for discharge.

Lying down
Place a towel or pillow under your right shoulder and your right hand behind your head. Examine your right breast with your left hand.

Breast exam
Fingers flat, press gently in small circles, starting at the outermost top edge of your breast and spiraling in toward the nipple. Examine every part of the breast. Repeat with left breast.

Flat surface
With your arm resting on a firm surface, use the same circular motion to examine the underarm area. This is breast tissue, too.

Riley residents to vote on law-enforcement center

SCOTT CONNER
staff reporter

The Manhattan city and Riley County commissions discussed the city commission's support of the upcoming bond issue for the new law-enforcement center.

In the Nov. 5 election, Riley County residents will be voting on a bond issue that will help consolidate the Riley County Police Department with the construction of a new law-enforcement center.

The Riley County Board of County Commissioners has spent eight months researching and developing the bond proposal.

If the bond issue passes, a new .5-percent sales tax will be applied in 1999 to Riley County to help pay for the new center. Because Manhattan and Riley County law enforcement is consolidated, the Riley County Board of Commissioners is seeking the endorsement of the city commission for the project.

County Commissioner Russell Frey asked the city commission to vote to support the bond issue at its next meeting Tuesday. Frey said this would show the people of Riley County and Manhattan that the city and county commissions are working together to help the county work toward a functional law enforcement.

City Commissioner Steve Hall said he is not opposed to individual members' endorsing the bond issue but is opposed to the commission as a whole endorsing the issue.

"I have trouble with government entities' endorsing other government entities," said Hall.

Hall said he thinks each part of government should take care of its own business.

Hall said this has never been done before in Manhattan. When the city proposed a new sales tax, the county never got involved. The same happened when the school board proposed a bond issue to upgrade facilities. No one else got involved.

"If I wanted to get involved in specific issues of the county, I would run for county commissioner. If I wanted to get involved in K-State issues, I would try to become a faculty member, and if I wanted to become involved in the school-board issues, I would run for the school board," Hall said.

Hall also said he was concerned about placing a burden on future city commissioners that might be elected in next April's elections.

found out there might have been an incident where a drug such as Rohypnol was used in Manhattan, he said he felt it was necessary to inform the area media to get the word out.

"I can tell you that obviously we received an unconfirmed report sometime over this weekend that led me to believe our University community would be best served with press releases saying that we might have a problem with Rohypnol," Bosco said.

Mellgren said it is undetermined at this time what would happen to a student who was responsible for committing a crime such as what might have occurred involving Rohypnol on Saturday night.

"We'll first determine if there was a crime, and then we'll determine the seriousness," Mellgren said.

Mellgren said University-related crimes are handled the same way as other crimes.

"Any time a crime is committed against the law, it has to be brought through the court system," he said.

Bosco said he agreed.

"Generally, our philosophy has been to encourage criminal prosecution in any manner that involves crimes against an individual," Bosco said.

Bosco said following legal proceedings, the University follows stringent due process procedures before there is a non-academic dismissal.

HARASS

conduct and the victims have a case under workers' compensation law, but it was not sexual harassment.

He said sexual-discrimination laws should be "aimed at enhancing the opportunities for people who have traditionally not been in the workplace."

Lawyers for the three employees said the case is clearly sexual harassment, no matter what the sexual orientation or gender of those involved.

The lumber company "would want you to believe that this is the kind of stuff guys do," said the employees' lawyer, Timothy Ryan, who argued the case before the high court Wednesday.

Massachusetts law defines sexual harassment as any unwelcome sexual advances or requests for sexual favors, but it makes no distinction for gender.

Federal law also makes no gender distinctions, but federal judges have arrived at differing decisions as to whether someone can be sexually harassed by a person of the same sex, said Elizabeth Bartholet, who teaches employment discrimination at Harvard Law School.

Mary Bonauto, a lawyer with Gay & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders, said she fears same-sex harassment cases will turn into witch hunts if they are permitted to hinge on the sexual preference of those involved.

"When it comes to how men treat women for the most part now, people get it that men aren't supposed to be asking women for sex to keep their jobs," said Bonauto, who filed a friend-of-the-court brief in favor of the employees. "We think the same rules should apply when it's a man against a man."

Last week in Chicago, a federal judge ruled a former convenience-store worker who says his male boss kissed and grabbed him while making degrading sexual remarks could not collect damages under civil-rights law.

Campaign generates funds; 'Flinthills' honors donators

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

The hallway of the Geary Community Hospital filled with applause as the sculpture "Flinthills" was unveiled last night.

The work was created by Bob Clore, K-State associate professor of art, and Douglas Wilt, a former K-State art and graphic design major.

The sculpture was the crowning event of a campaign called "Building a Foundation for Your Health." The campaign was designed to generate funds for the Martha K. Hoover Women's Center, a new rehabilitation unit, and for endowment funds to generate income for future needs, said Rebecca Bossemeyer, director of development for the Geary Community Healthcare Foundation.

The project amassed pledges amounting to about $2.7 million, to be donated over the next three years.

"Anyone who gave $1,000 or more would get their name on the donor wall," said Bossemeyer. Everyone who donated was honored in a book mounted on a walnut shelf next to the sculpture. The shelf was made by Angell Woodwork of Junction City.

The sculpture consists of seven panels. Those seven panels are actually only two original designs created by Clore and Wilt. The edges all match so the panels can be placed in any sequence to create a panoramic picture of the Flint Hills, Wilt said.

Work on the project began several months ago.

"We made a proposal to the foundation board in the form of drawings," said Clore.

The board liked the idea of the sculpture they presented, and it gave Clore and Wilt the go-ahead with the project.

Next, a clay sculpture was created using oil-based clay on a Masonite wood base, said Wilt. The artists researched landscape books and pictures of the Flint Hills to create a realistic portrait of that particular Kansas landscape.

A rubber mold was made from the clay sculpture, and individual pieces were cast from the mold using a plastic resin and bronze. The final step involved heating, polishing and mounting on wood for hanging, Wilt said.

Additional panels were on display, mounted in walnut frames and available for sale.

Members of the Geary Community Healthcare Foundation and all in attendance said they were pleased with the work.

"We wanted something unique and something that reflected our community," said Bossemeyer.

South African style 'Romeo and Juliet' opens at McCain

MATT BASLER
staff reporter

Along with the traditional version of "Romeo and Juliet," there is the "West Side Story" version. Enter the new South African version.

The South African version of "Romeo and Juliet" will be performed by the Haworth Shakespeare Festival at 8 p.m. tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The performance will focus on the social and racial problems that plague South Africa.

The cast for "Romeo and Juliet" has performed with the Royal Shakespeare Co. and the Royal National Theatre of Great Britain.

Kristin Brighton, senior in journalism and mass communications, is the marketing assistant for McCain.

"All the actors are classically trained," Brighton said.

Some of the cast members are from Great Britain and tour around the nation, Brighton said.

She said the show brings out South African culture to provide an authentic performance.

"They've taken a lot of traditional South African fabrics and music, and paired them together to give it flare," she said.

Tickets for the performance are on sale at the McCain Box Office. Tickets cost $6 to $10 for students and children and $10 to $20 for the public.

Brighton said she expects to fill the upper balcony for the show.

"It looks to be tremendous," she said.

As part of its contract, the Haworth Shakespeare Festival will also present a special performance at 1 p.m. today for high-school students, David Frain, special assistant at McCain, said.

Orchestra performs premiere at K-State

DARCIE MCCONKEY
staff reporter

K-State students, parents and other Manhattan community members packed McCain Auditorium Tuesday evening for this year's premier performance of the K-State Orchestra.

The sound of instruments permeated the air as the orchestra presented four classical music selections under the direction of conductor David Littrell.

The first three songs were "Orpheus," by Franz Liszt, "Five Pieces for String Orchestra," by Paul Hindemith; and Edward Elgar's "Cockaigne Overture."

"Orpheus," the first piece, included a violin solo by Miranda Boettcher, junior in business administration. This selection began with the gentle strumming of the harp, and the entire orchestra soon joined to create a melodious musical presentation.

"Five Pieces for String Orchestra" featured the strings section in a heavier musical arrangement. The music seemed to contain a variety of tempos and lacked the grace of "Orpheus."

The next piece, "Cockaigne Overture," was a lighter, more lively arrangement featuring the entire orchestra. This piece was accentuated with loud crashes from the percussion section, shocking the audience and moving them to the edge of their seats.

Following the intermission, three faculty performers joined the orchestra to present "Triple Concerto in C Major," by Ludwig van Beethoven.

K-State music professors Cora Cooper, Joseph Brumbeloe and Littrell were featured soloists, while William Wingfield, accompanist for the K-State choir, conducted the orchestra.

During the three movements, Cooper played the violin, Littrell played the cello, and Brumbeloe accompanied the string soloists on the piano.

This classical selection displayed a superb combination of talents. The orchestra accompanied the soloists well, highlighting the sound of the individual instruments.

One of the most impressive elements of "Triple Concerto in C Major" was the speed at which Cooper and Littrell played in the second movement. It was obvious the two professors had skill and talent, and the concert was the perfect way to display local musical talent.

Hunt Band in town

arts & entertainment editor

Experience rhythm and blues live.

The Kelley Hunt Band will play in the Way Down Lounge at 10 p.m. Saturday. Kelley Hunt is the lead vocalist for the band.

Hunt is originally from Salina. Although she now lives in Lawrence, she spends most of her time traveling to Nashville, Tenn., and Los Angeles to work on her newly released album.

"I live in Lawrence. It's a good location for me, because it's right in the middle of the states," Hunt said.

Most of the music Hunt plays are songs she has composed herself.

"Generally in my music, you can hear the influence of rhythm and blues," Hunt said.

In most of her performances, the audience ends up dancing, Hunt said.

"I play mostly by ear," Hunt said. "My piano teacher in fifth or sixth grade made me learn to read music. Then she also helped me learn boogie-woogie style."

Hunt plays piano and, on occasion, the 12-string guitar.

"The piano is my main instrument. That's really my strong instrument," Hunt said.

Hunt's band is usually a quartet. Occasionally she tours with her producer, Mike Finnigan.

Although Hunt's band is mainly R&B, she writes other kinds of music, such as gospel and ballads.

"When I go out with the band, I stick to the R&B genre of music," Hunt said.

Even though her music has a national label, Hunt said she hopes for a different label with a larger market.

"What's happening right now is that the music that the next couple of albums is already written," Hunt said. "I'd like to be able to travel overseas. It's been a real good year, and I'm hoping it will continue."

The Kelley Hunt Band has played at significant blues festivals in New York State and St. Louis.

"My band has a tough bill, because all of the music is original. One night we'll be playing for an audience of 300, and the next night 20,000. I'm really proud of them," Hunt said.

She said her band is pumped for its performance Saturday.

"The smaller concerts are more intimate. They thrive on that," Hunt said.

Although Hunt has played in bands since high school, she said her first serious effort to break into the market was with a band called Kinetics.

"I'd say the last five years or so have been a serious effort," Hunt said.

In her personal life, Hunt said she also has had some success. She is engaged to her agent, Al Berman, from Out Loud Talent.

"I'm getting married right after Thanksgiving. We've been friends for several years," Hunt said. "He has a real good understanding of what I do. Even as friends and co-workers, he's always encouraged me. I'm real comfortable, and I don't have any fears."

Hunt also has an 11-year-old son named Adrian. In the summertime he travels with her to day and evening shows, Hunt said.

Although Hunt said her newest songs were always her favorites, she does have two songs that are special to her, called "I Miss You" and "Crawl Through Kansas."

"Crawl Though Kansas" is a song about family roots. Hunt said it's important to her to remember where she came from.

"These two songs are near and dear to my heart," Hunt said. "I think 'I Miss You' is a style I've always loved."

Art highlights diseases

SPEEDREAD

▶ "Epidermal," an art exhibit of work by Scott Anderson, is in the Willard Gallery until Friday. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

It feels like Halloween in the Willard Gallery thanks to a morose exhibit that celebrates, in a strange sort of way, disease and tumors.

"Epidermal," an exhibit of work by Scott Anderson, a fifth-year senior in art with a concentration in painting and drawing, will only stay in the gallery until Friday.

Anderson's paintings, each detailed homages via a surrealistic representation of tumors and disease — in all their outlandish pop-culture colors — Anderson feels have entered the realm of pop culture for all the wrong reasons.

"They're more like documenting this fashionable hysteria that goes along with everything people are frightened with at the close of the century and the millennium," Anderson said.

"I'm not making fun of these things."

Anderson said he pulls most of the images and ideas for his paintings from his head, although some of his most recent work, which is not included in this show, does draw some inspiration from textbook examples of parts of the human body.

Anderson said the paintings in "Epidermal" are generalizations of tumors and diseases, so it follows that they take on a sort of universality.

By not specifically referring to the AIDS virus or other more recent epidemics, Anderson has created timeless imagery, relevant beyond the contemporary.

That made it seem all the more odd when Anderson said these paintings deal specifically with the current media and pop-culture fascination with disease and wouldn't be relevant in five years.

> "Anderson said the paintings in "Epidermal" are generalizations of tumors and diseases, so it follows that they take on a sort of universality. By not specifically referring to the AIDS virus or other more recent epidemics, Anderson has created timeless imagery, relevant beyond the contemporary."

Anderson isn't alone among artists who are examining, in a sometimes superficial, sometimes interesting way, the end of the 20th century and the second millennium.

The irony of most of this apocalyptic art , is although it deals specifically with these very immediate feelings, it remains connected to the past through references and influences.

That is a basic form of art, anyway.

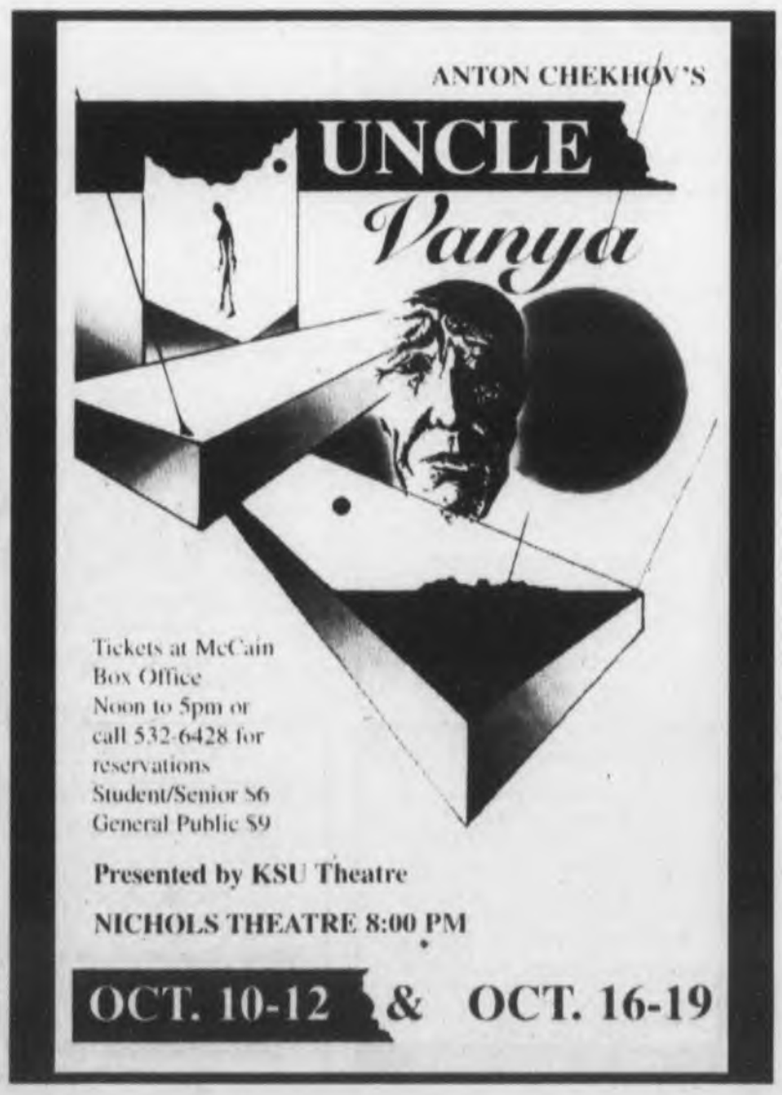
What one must ask is if this art is an Orwellian hyperbole or a true reflection of our society.

I would suggest most of these millennia-associated tensions are still very much relegated to the fringes of society — though it can make for compelling art.

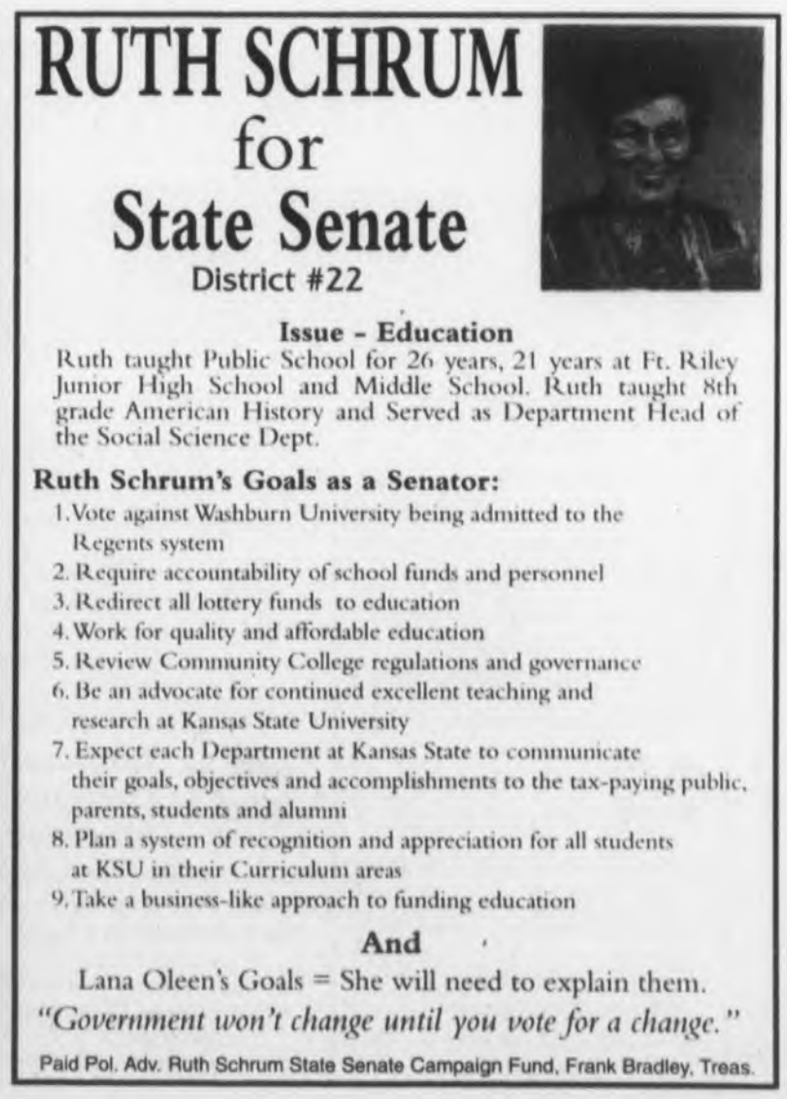
Anderson's connection to the past is his subtle homage to illuminated manuscripts and religious icons.

As in his painting, "Bard and Prophet" (acrylic, oil and pencil 1996), voluptuous, living tumors hover against a simple background, all surrounded by strange depictions of leafy fruit.

If one can get around the subject matter (weaker stomachs need not apply), the paintings become delightful compositional and colorful works rarely seen in work below the graduate level.



Perhaps the strongest point of Anderson's show is its cohesiveness.



All too often, a bachelor of fine arts or group show gets lost in its desire to be too many things at once or in an apparent lack of artistic and spiritual progression.

Anderson said the show was organized rather hastily, but he will be back next semester with some newer work for his bachelor of fine arts show.

Hopefully, the world won't end between now and next spring.

conjunction with funds donated by the Curry family.

"We have a wonderful relationship with the Curry family," Wefald said, "and the painting is a remarkable work. It will, perhaps, even rival the murals in the Capitol."

Curry's famous murals of Kansas history have been drawing crowds at the Statehouse in Topeka for years.

Wefald said the Curry family has appreciated K-State ever since it purchased a Curry painting for $500 during the Depression, which apparently helped the artist out a lot financially.

> "...The painting is a remarkable work. It will, perhaps, even rival the murals in the capitol."

> PRESIDENT OF FRIENDS OF ART

"Mrs. Curry wrote the Friends of Art a note," Wefald said. "She told us to hang the painting in the most dominating spot in the museum.

"She also wrote 'On John's part, a deep sigh of content now to know that at long last he's come into his own with the state of Kansas,'" Wefald said.

Curry was never in favor in Kansas, which is why a majority of his work is found mostly in out-of-state collections.

"It's touching to know she's happy we're bringing that painting back to Kansas," Wefald said.

Wefald said the Friends are currently in the process of purchasing a war-time poster by Curry from a gallery in Chicago.

"We'll continue to search out those things that make sense to us and what the curator wants," she said.

unless they lived in a college town.

"My art class took a trip to Lindsborg, and we met Birger Sandzen in his studio," Marianna said. "He was so gracious."

Marianna probably had no idea when meeting Sandzen he would eventually become one of Kansas' most beloved artists or that his donation of two paintings to the K-State art collection would become the foundation for the present-day collection.

Marianna said the new museum is a tribute to the city of Manhattan for giving her the chance to experience art as a 15-year-old.

"Ross and I both feel art and music are so important to everyone's lives," Marianna said.

The Beaches have seen the new museum finished, although they have yet to see a painting hanging in the galleries.

This is actually the second building Marianna has helped to build on K-State's campus, because she was an active participant in lobbying the Kansas Legislature to pass a fee to build the Union.

Before the Union was built, Marianna had complained in her column there were no places to have dances on the weekends except Anderson Hall.

To see the museum finally open, Ross and Marianna could not be any more pleased.

More than 50 years later, the Beaches are still as active for K-State as they ever were.

"Both Marianna and I are so happy to bring this added dimension to the students of K-State and the citizens of Kansas," Ross said.

Marianna added, "I would want them to appreciate all those years of gathering art and the marvelous collection that K-State does own."

TWA probe turns to families for help

■ Crash investigators warn relatives tough questions are in store for them

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SMITHTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — After nearly three months of coming up dry in the investigation of TWA Flight 800, the FBI has informed the grieving relatives of the dead that agents will start asking them questions.

"We need the victims to be part of our team," James Kallstrom, an FBI assistant director, said. "We want to obtain any information that they think may be of value to us."

Kallstrom, who is leading the criminal probe into the cause of the July 17 explosion that killed all 230 people aboard, said the delay in interviewing relatives came because agents were focused on other areas, and because he wanted to spare the family members for as long as possible.

In a two-page letter sent last week to relatives, Kallstrom expressed his condolences and informed them that they would be contacted to set up an appointment in the next few weeks.

"An event such as this leaves all of us with many questions but with few answers," Kallstrom wrote.

"You have our commitment as professional investigators that we will spare no effort to answer one of those questions: What caused this terrible tragedy?" he wrote.

Investigators' hopes of finding the key pieces to unlock the mystery have been renewed now that the U.S. Navy's sonar systems have picked up 200 more targets of debris during the last couple of days, a source told the Associated Press Wednesday on condition of anonymity.

"We hope the vital piece, if it exists, is among these new hits," the source said, adding that divers will investigate how many of the targets are from actual wreckage or from unrelated debris such as clam beds.

In addition to trying to find out whether the crash was caused by a bomb, a missile or a mechanical malfunction, agents have been considering other scenarios — such as whether it was an individual crime motivated by revenge, jealousy, insurance fraud or even suicide.

As part of the preparation for asking tough questions, about 50 FBI agents attended a three-hour sensitivity session with family members from two prior plane disasters.

> "They came unannounced to my door and told me, 'We are not here to answer your questions.'
> • VICTORIA CUMMOCK
> WIFE OF PAN AM 103 VICTIM

"We hope that they understand we want to do a professional job, but with as much gentleness and compassion as we can," Kallstrom said. "We didn't want to repeat what some victim's families said was offensive treatment in the past by law enforcement."

Victoria Cummock of Coral Gables, Fla., said she got cold, even rude treatment from FBI agents after her husband perished in the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland, eight years ago.

"I felt like I lost my husband and my country," said Cummock, who participated in the FBI sensitivity sessions. "They came unannounced to my door and told me, 'We are not here to answer your questions. We are here for you to answer ours, thank you very much.'"

She said many FBI agents were reluctant to reveal much information to the families, such as details about the bodies.

"I told them when someone has had so much taken away from them, you can't take any more away," Cummock, who is president of the Families of Pan Am 103, said. "They are entitled to know. And sometimes your imagination of what happened is worse than the reality."

Also present at the session was Hans Ephraimson-abt of Ridgefield, N.J., head of the American Association for Families of KAL-007. His 23-year-old daughter was among those killed when the Korean Airlines jet was shot down north of Japan in 1985 by a Soviet jet.

Ephraimson-abt was outraged at his treatment by the U.S. State Department and other officials, and suggested that agents familiarize themselves with their interview subjects this time around.

Police arrest student for sexual battery

SPEED

- A 20-year-old K-State sophomore says she was sexually assaulted Sunday morning. The alleged perpetrator said he had no comment about the arrest.

KIMBERLY HEFLING
news editor

A 21-year-old K-State student was arrested for aggravated sexual battery, a felony, early Sunday morning.

Andrew Wallace, 1224 Fremont St., was later released on $5,000 bond. Wallace said he had no comment about the arrest.

The alleged victim, a 20-year-old sophomore at K-State, said she did not wish to have her name printed in the Collegian because of fear of retribution from Wallace and members of his fraternity.

The alleged victim said she met Wallace Saturday evening at a bar in Aggieville but did not talk to him very long.

"I said, 'Hey, nice to meet you,' but that was about it," she said.

About 1 a.m., the alleged victim was taken to her apartment by Andreina Saez, sophomore in industrial engineering, because she had been drinking and was feeling ill.

When they got to the alleged victim's house, Saez said she helped the alleged victim into her pajamas and into bed.

Later, when Saez said on the phone, Wallace knocked on the door and asked for the alleged victim, Saez said. She said she let him in because there was a get-together planned at the apartment later in the evening.

Saez said she then got off the phone

Professor receives Carnegie award

"I saw students' anxieties, fear and sometimes hostility toward physics. What I wanted to do was go out and get some real-life situations where we could apply the physics of everyday life."

• DEAN ZOLLMAN
PHYSICS PROFESSOR

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

Innovative teaching ideas earned a K-State professor the 1996 Professor of the Year Award by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching.

Dean Zollman, physics professor, was selected for the award from a field of 204 professors from universities across the country. This is the first time a Kansas professor has won the national Professor of the Year award, which includes a $5,000 cash prize and a certificate of recognition.

Zollman

"I guess this is because of 25 years of worrying a lot about how to teach physics and a lot of that time spent listening to students about how to do that," Zollman said.

"I find it a real challenge to explain to students why physics might be exciting," he said.

Jim Legg, head of the physics department, said Zollman has been able to meet that challenge by finding new and interesting ways to teach physics.

Zollman, who was appointed to the K-State faculty in 1970, has written articles about using interactive technology

Ceremony marks opening of Beach museum

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

After 10 years of fundraising, decades of hoping and a long summer of preparation and final construction, K-State's art museum finally opened its doors Sunday.

Approximately 200 people turned out for the opening ceremonies for the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, which were blessed with a warm and sunny day.

The half-hour presentation was more of a giant thank-you card to supporters, both spiritual and financial, and to a more than 50-year-old vision of a campus art museum.

The most touching moment of the half-hour ceremony transpired with an address given by President Jon Wefald — who, with his wife, Ruth Ann Wefald, leading the way, began the process of fundraising for the museum when he came to campus in 1986.

Fighting back tears throughout his speech, Wefald spoke of the journey he has taken to build K-State into a preeminent university with a first-rate art museum.

"This is the culmination of a dream," Wefald said.

Wefald recounted his struggles to bring up enrollment numbers, increase scholarship and research funding, expand the library and, the highlight of Sunday, build an art museum.

Until Sunday, K-State was the only university in the Big 8 that did not have an art museum.

"When people say it can't be done, that's when I get going," Wefald said, to cheers in the audience.

"When you have good people to believe in the dream and visualize the dream, there's nothing you can't do. We've watched this grow from day one — only because we live next door."

Wefald then thanked the architect of the museum, Arthur Andersson, who was present, and Eby Construction for their dedication to creating a signature building.

"Well, Arthur," Wefald said, "this is magic — this is magical."

As even the museum staff will attest, Wefald is one of the most energetic, verbal supporters of the museum. In recent weeks, Wefald has helped facilities clean it in preparation for this important day — suggesting in this address that, if he would find litter on the grounds of the museum, he would personally pick it up.

"As one of our planners, Gerald Carter, told me the other day, as the new library

Students might need to re-register to vote

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

If you think you registered to vote at fee payment, think again. Your card could have gotten lost or sent to the wrong address.

"If anyone registered at the beginning of the school year and did not receive a voter registration card, they should check with the Riley county clerk's office," Karen Tryphonas, receptionist at the Office of Student Activities and Services, said.

During fee payment in August, students could register to vote and everything that was brought back to the office was turned in, Tryphonas said.

Sometimes things do get misplaced. If a voter-registration form was filled out incorrectly, the voter-registration card could get mailed to the wrong address.

"If you moved since last time, you have to re-register, but most people don't know that," she said. "Even if it's across the street, it could put you in a totally different precinct."

With so many different groups registering voters, the guidelines for filling out the form may not be followed, and the forms may not be filled out properly, she said. People run the risk of improper registration.

Candidate addresses health-care systems, balancing budget at round-table discussion

LILLIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

John Frieden, candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives, addressed health-care reform, the national debt, tax cuts and campaign finance reform Friday.

The round-table discussion was sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice.

About twenty people attended the meeting at Java Espresso and Bakery in Aggieville.

Frieden told the group he doesn't have any preplanned agenda. He said he would just tackle some big issues.

John Exdell, professor of philosophy and editor of the MAPJ newsletter, and Anne Cowan, co-chair of the MAPJ board of directors, presented an idea for health-care reform.

They suggested looking at the Canadian Health Care System, which is not for profit and raises money out of public taxes. It is a way of covering everyone and preserving the freedom to choose a physician, they said.

Frieden said he agreed the health-care system is not meeting the needs of the country.

"I'm for some type of national system. I am a little reluctant to let the federal government take it over," he said.

Frieden said he also wants to see the budget balanced, but he disagrees with many of the cuts Congress has made.

"Discretionary programs have been squeezed about as hard as they can be squeezed," he said.

The programs include welfare and Medicare.

Congress hasn't looked at corporate subsidies, which are a $300-billion industry, he said.

"If everybody else is going to take a hit, they should, too," Frieden said of corporate interests.

A reasonable health-care system and a balanced budget are two things that take precedence over tax cuts, Frieden said.

"Both parties are being irresponsible by making campaign promises to cut everybody's taxes in society," Frieden said.

Sixteen cents of every dollar paid in taxes goes to the national debt, Frieden said. He wants that 16 cents back for education, the environment and other programs.

However, Frieden said political campaigns aren't as deserving of tax money.

"I don't like the thought of public financing, but I don't like what we have now," Frieden said.

"Maybe the time is right to have some campaign finance reform," he said.

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• TWA PROBABLY MECHANICAL FAILURE. With no hard evidence, some federal transportation investigators are leaning toward mechanical failure as the cause of the TWA Flight 800 explosion. Bomb and missile theories have lower probability, said Bernard Loeb, the National Transportation Safety Board's director of aviation safety.

• LATINOS MARCH IN WASHINGTON. Waving flags and carrying banners demanding justice, thousands of Hispanic Americans marched in the capital Saturday to push for simplified citizenship procedures and a $7 minimum wage. Mobilized by new and more stringent welfare and immigration laws and what they see as growing anti-newcomer sentiment, Hispanics came from around the country to participate in the first national march for Latino and immigrant rights. Participants reminded observers that Latinos are expected to be the nation's largest minority group by 2000.

• FIRE THREATENS BIG SUR. Fire crews set backfires Sunday hoping to contain a 9,500-acre wildfire that was expected to grow significantly in the steep slopes of the southern Big Sur. The fire was only 20 percent contained. About 2,300 firefighters were on the lines, handicapped by a lack of passable roads and sloping terrain with some grades as steep as 70 percent. The blaze, believed to have been started by an arsonist, began last week.

• SEVEN UNDER ARREST IN BOMB PLOT. The federal complex that authorities say a militia group wanted blown up will eventually allow the FBI to keep tabs on people in ways that anti-government crusaders fear. Seven men with ties to the West Virginia Mountaineer Militia are charged with conspiring to bomb the FBI's Criminal Justice Information Services Division complex in Clarksburg, about 80 miles south of Pittsburgh.

The facility will use computerized records to monitor everyone from gun buyers to day-care center employees. Militia leaders, including one of the men arrested Friday, have complained about federal government efforts to take away guns and restrict freedoms. Members of the militia provided blueprints of the $200-million facility to an undercover agent posing as a broker for a fictitious terrorist group that claimed to want to blow up the structure.

• EIGHT DROWN IN DOMINICAN REPUBLIC SHIPWRECK. An overcrowded boat carrying Dominicans trying to immigrate illegally to Puerto Rico caught fire and sank, killing eight of the passengers. Three survivors said they were raped by Dominican sailors. The boat, carrying at least 63 people, sank Friday. Authorities detained 13 survivors, and two others were hospitalized with severe burns. Thirty-seven people were still missing. Rescue efforts continued Saturday despite heavy rains. Three women who survived the shipwreck and eluded authorities told El Nacional newspaper that they were raped and robbed by 20 members of the Dominican navy who found them on a beach in Higuey. Police are investigating.

• PEACE TALKS TO BEGIN IN BURUNDI. Burundi's warring factions — minority Tutsis and majority Hutus — have agreed to open talks to end a three-year civil war that has claimed 150,000 lives.

CITY STATE

• MACHINISTS APPROVE FIVE-YEAR PACT WITH CESSNA. A five-year contract with a 5-percent increase in the first year has been ratified by Machinists Union members employed at Cessna Aircraft Co. Union officials would not release vote totals or percentages. Richard Aldrich, business representative for Machinists District Lodge 70, characterized the margin of votes in favor of the contract as fairly strong. Under the contract, workers will get another 5-percent increase in 1997, a 4-percent increase in 1998, a 4-percent lump-sum payment in 1999 and a final 4-percent increase in 2000.

ELEVEN-YEAR-OLD Eric VanNevel instructs Jonathan Kuder and Rahul Desai in making a crane Saturday at UFM.

UFM has the philosophy that anybody can teach and anybody can learn.

When 11-year old Eric VanNevel approached Linda Teener, director of UFM, about teaching a class this fall, she was more than happy to make him a member of its faculty.

"Eric is the youngest teacher we've had so far, but our faculty is made up of several unconventional teachers. We've had a 12-year-old teach insect collecting and a 15-year-old teach beginning ballet," Teener said.

So what does it take to be a teacher at UFM? Interest. No degree, no teaching experience required, just an interest in whatever you'd like to teach and a willingness to share it with others.

VanNevel's specialty is origami, the art of paper folding.

"I started doing origami when I was 7,and when I was in the fourth grade, I taught my class at Marlatt School how to make paper cranes with origami paper. Then I took a class at UFM on making paper airplanes and really liked it so I decided to ask if I could teach," he said.

The first class met on Saturday from 10:00 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. Both students were younger than VanNevel who is now a fifth grader.

"We made six things, a balloon, a swan, a sailboat and some other stuff. I hadn't made a sailboat in a while so it took me a long time," VanNevel said.

The class was listed in the youth section of the UFM catalog so there was a chance some of his students could have been older so Anita VanNevel, VanNevel's mother, sat in on the class.

"I certainly can't help him teach. I'll just be there to watch over," she said.

Teener said the closeness in age will give the students a new perspective.

"It'll give them more confidence to share what they know, and hopefully everyone learns from each other," she said.

Eric VanNevel's second and final class will be at the same time on Saturday. He said he plans to teach again next year but will teach a more advanced class in origami.

WSU, Texas take first in speech tournament

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON

Wichita State University took home the swing school sweeps and the Bethel College school sweeps this weekend at the Sunflower Swing speech tournament.

The K-State sweeps award went to the University of Texas at Austin.

Jeffrey Jarman, Wichita State's director of forensics, said he was proud to have a successful team.

"I'm not at all surprised, because my students put in a lot of time, but it is nice to see the recognition," he said.

About 120 students and 30 coaches participated in the competition, which took place on the K-State campus. K-State was host on Saturday, and Bethel College was host on Sunday.

"For the most part, K-State is not competing," Craig Brown, director of individual events forensics, said. "Our main obligation is to be the host, so we put in some new competitors."

Christopher McLemore, freshman in biology, won first place in the persuasive-speaking competition. He said it was definitely a big surprise but a good surprise as well.

"These people have a talent for speaking. For a lot of them, it is the fun of performing. They are very intelligent people, and this is a way of showing that intelligence. It has all the advantages of sports, but there are no injuries, and you get to dress nicer," Brown said.

Brown said being host to the competition is a chance to say thank you and return the favors for something someone else has done. Students get a better feel for what others have gone through for them in previous competitions.

Rich Knight, director of forensics at West Texas A&M, said it was a good tournament because K-State made everyone feel so welcome.

"I think they are great. They provided the judges with a lot of food and pop. Not everybody does that, but if they do, it brings people back," Knight said.

Knight had three students who came to compete. He coaches every student, and students also work among themselves.

"We are kind of a culture of our own. We can talk to each other. Certain students do fear public speaking but come to realize if they overcome their fear they can present themselves so they can take what they learn here and make it purely applicable to what they do. That's what is wonderful," he said.

Tammy Duvanel-Unruh, a coach from Bethel, said working with Craig Brown was like working

Clinton approves outlawing of roofies, similar narcotics

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — President Clinton signed a bill Sunday outlawing Rohypnol and other so-called date-rape drugs used by rapists in what he called "a sick attempt to facilitate their violent crimes."

The bill subjects rapists to an additional 20 years in prison if they use a narcotic to incapacitate their victims.

With a line of police officers forming a law-and-order backdrop, Clinton said, "Today, I signed legislation to crack down on criminals who employ illegal drugs in a sick attempt to facilitate their violent crimes.

"We must do everything we can to stop it."

For the first time, using a drug as a weapon is illegal under the new law. Supporters argue that dropping a pill in a victim's drink is just as nefarious as putting a knife to her throat.

He signed the measure on a sunny Denver tarmac before boarding Air Force One for Albuquerque, N.M., where he planned three days of mock debates, golf and rest.

The new law provides for a 20-year sentence for the use of an illegal drug as a tool of rape or other violent crime, as well as possession, manufacture or distribution of an illegal drug with intent to use it in commission of a violent crime. Simple possession of Rohypnol, with no proven intent, carries up to three years in prison.

The new law follows a sharp increase in reported use of Rohypnol pills, known on the street as roofies. The odorless, colorless, tasteless tranquilizer — 10-20 times more powerful than Valium — can be dropped into unknowing victims' drinks, causing them to pass out and have little memory of what happens next.

Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., has said the tactic is a crisis on the nation's college campuses.

Although Rohypnol is illegal in the United States, it is used legally in other countries to treat sleeplessness, anxiety, convulsions and muscle tension.

The Republican-led House and Senate easily passed the bill early this month. Clinton, who won New Mexico and Colorado in 1992, leads narrowly in current Colorado polls and holds a comfortable margin in New Mexico.

IN OUR OPINION

Election day is nearing; make sure you're ready

It's getting down to the wire. Election day is only 22 days away.

You need to register to vote, and you only have 10 days left to do it.

It might take a little time, but all you need to do is stop by the Office of Student Activities and Services in the K-State Student Union and fill out a little form.

WHY WE CARE

Only 22 days until election day. Make sure you're registered to vote and you know who the candiates are and what they stand for.

Or stop by one of the registration tables in the campus dining centers today from 4:30 to 6:30 p.m.

You might have already registered at fee payment, but because a few people's registrations were misplaced, you should call the Riley County Clerk's office at 537-6300 to make sure you are registered in Riley County.

You can register at the County Clerk's Office, Manhattan Public Library and Westloop Dillons.

It's so easy to get registered there is no excuse not to.

In addition, you need to know who you are going to vote for.

Following election coverage in the Collegian and in your hometown newspaper will not only tell you who will be on the ballot, but what the candidates stand for.

If you register to vote, read up on the candidates and take the time to vote, then you can whine and complain all you like.

So watch the debates. President Clinton and Bob Dole will match wits again Wednesday.

For local issues, go to one of the area's upcoming debates.

The local candidates for the State Board of Education, Eloise Lynch and Scott Hill, will debate tonight in Bluemont 217 at 7:15 p.m.

And the State House of Representatives candidates from District 62, Kent Glasscock and Robert Littrell, will participate in a debate at noon Oct. 21 in the Union courtyard.

If you can't make it to the debate, catch the coverage in the Collegian.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at karolyi@ksu.edu.

Don't sell out

(unless you get paid really well)

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

The newsroom smelled good for a few days last week.

I don't know how many of you have been in here, but it is not always a pleasing olfactory experience. There are from five to 50 people in this small poorly ventilated room at any given time. Some of these people are in here 18 hours a day. The only word to describe the smell is funk.

But Thursday and Friday were different. Some of the people who work here actually went home and took a shower. They put on clean clothes and rubbed on deodorant, and some even doused themselves in perfume.

It is interview time.

Gannett Newspapers came to Kedzie Hall interviewing for internships and employment.

I know this phenomenon is not unique to the newsroom. All across campus at different times of the year, corporate suits come looking for prospective slave labor (internships) and low-paid, mailroom employees (entry-level positions).

I haven't the vaguest idea when I will be graduating, and I already have a paying part-time job for the summer, so I am seizing the opportunity to watch this mayhem instead of being a part of it.

The interview process makes a great spectator sport. A little hard to keep score, but fun to watch nonetheless.

First up, the résumé.

Résumé design is important. The debate about whether your résumé should fit on only one page has divided families and caused wars.

Another important debate: If your grade point average reflects your ability to consume alcoholic beverages more than your intelligence level, should you put in on your résumé?

Most résumés include an objective. Does that seem stupid to anyone else? Isn't it obvious?

The objective is to get a job, to secure employment, to get paid to leave your living room couch everyday. The objective is to make enough money to perhaps purchase a car that runs and has insurance, to live in a place without a constantly running toilet and maybe eat something besides Ramen noodles occasionally.

> "The objective is to make enough money to perhaps purchase a car that runs and has insurance, to live in a place without a constantly running toilet and maybe eat something besides Ramen noodles occasionally."

It's not just what is in your résumé, but what your résumé is on. Paper selection is apparently an important thing. There are three shades of white and two shades of off-white at Kinko's Copies. Not just regular paper, but paper made out of some cotton-stock stuff. Copy Co. has paper that has the texture of linen. I guess the belief is good paper, pretty paper might get you into the occupation of your dreams.

My favorite part of the résumé is the references. These are the names, address and phone numbers of people who are not related to you but that you are fairly sure will say good things about you if asked. (Translation: People who like you enough to lie like big dogs about how long they have known you and what a hard worker you are.)

Everyone stretches the truth on their résumé; some do more creative expansion of facts than others. Do interviewers actually check the stuff you put in your résumé? If I put on my résumé I won the Pulitzer Prize for Commentary in 1995, do you think the interviewer would know I was lying?

Second — and the more subjective part of the selection/rejection process — is the fashion competition.

You are what you wear.

If your idea of dressing for the day is dragging a pair of sweatpants out of the dirty clothes and throwing on a T-shirt received for filling out a credit card application, then you are in trouble.

For an interview, you are expected to wear clean clothes. Jackets, pantyhose and shirts with buttons are the norm. You are expected to choose the socially acceptable, gender-appropriate clothing.

This whole process bothers me.

I'll bust my ass for five years of college. I'll work, slave and practically kill myself for the sake of experience. I'll bribe professors and supervisors for positive references. For what? So that eventually someone will hire me based on one nicely textured sheet of lies and a well-pressed shirt.

I will go to my interviews in jeans. I will make my résumé as long as I damn well please and write it in crayon on bright pink construction paper if I like.

I refuse to sell out to the establishment. Unless they are paying really well and throw in a company car.

A return to innocence

Pooh-topia

"Once upon a time, a very long time ago, no, about last Friday," lived a very special character who guided several of us through many a nap time and our childhoods.

He lives in the Hundred Acre Wood under the name of Sanders. He is a Bear of Very Little Brain.

Do you remember? I'll bet your inner child does. It's Winnie-the-Pooh. And today is his birthday!

The love I have for Pooh Bear began with a blanket I called my Winnie-the-Poop blanket (nope, it's not a typo). No one could ever figure out why I called it that. It had no Pooh appliques or anything else that would lead me to associate it with that Silly Ol' Bear. The only resemblance they shared was the same yellow-orange color E.H. Shepard colored him.

No matter how much I resisted my afternoon naps, it was comforting to cuddle up in that blanket's flannel warmth. I would curl myself up into a ball and listen to my mom read about Tigger, Piglet, Kanga, Roo and the rest of the gang. My own Pooh-topia.

I still love Pooh. Some might argue my hobby borders on obsession. My friends and family have barely tolerated the calendars, wall hangings and books decorating my apartment and desk.

Why? you ask. After all, aren't we supposed to give up the fantasies of childhood by the time we become college seniors?

Absolutely not.

In fact, I cling to them. Pooh Bear is my one link — a free ticket — back to the days when things were simple and my biggest problem was whether Tracy Erdman could come over to play.

Read a few stories out of "Winnie-the-Pooh" and "The House at Pooh Corner" sometime. A.A. Milne's tales are so enchanting and vivid you can't help but be transported to the Hundred Acre Wood.

There is an innocence in Milne's Pooh stories, and out of that innocence comes simplicity. The innocence and simplicity put together provide a wisdom that can speak only to that place inside our souls reserved for childhood fantasies.

> "There is an innocence in Milne's Pooh stories, and out of that innocence comes simplicity. The innocence and simplicity put together provide a wisdom that can speak only to that place inside our souls reserved for childhood fantasies."

When I was a kid, I was much smaller than the others. It was an endless source of insecurity for me.

I couldn't run as fast or jump as far as the other kids, and I was always picked last for kickball. That's a big deal for a 6-year-old.

One day, I came home from first grade, and I was visibly upset. My big sister, Kelly, came home soon after and saw how upset I was.

We sat down and she read "Kanga and Baby Roo Come to the Forest and Piglet Has a Bath." I don't know if her reading choice was coincidence or planned on her part, but it worked.

'It is hard to be brave,' said Piglet, sniffing slightly, 'when you're only a Very Small Animal.'

"Rabbit who had begun to write very busily, looked up and said:

" 'It is because you are very small animal that you will be so Useful in the adventure before us.' "

Sure, it's corny. But it helped an insecure kid feel better about being the runt of the litter. And later in life I found out that most so-called flaws can be turned around to be Useful.

MY

Sera L. TANK

Depending on my mood, Pooh and the gang of the Hundred Acre Wood can have different effects on me.

If I'm in a good mood, he makes me feel more playful.

When I'm feeling sad or overly mellow, I'll sit down to read a few stories out of the books. They make me cry. Not a sad kind of crying, but the remembering-when crying.

When I'm angry, stressed out or grouchy, Pooh can serve to be somewhat of a sedative.

When I see a Winnie-the-Pooh display in a store, my friends can attest, I become a kid in a toy store. I suddenly desperately need that.

I don't think I'll be doing anything too extravagant to celebrate Pooh. Maybe I'll just curl up in my Winnie-the-Poop blanket and reread some stories.

Yes, the same blanket that started my Pooh infatuation, though it is thread-bare, worn and has bright orange finger paint on it, still covers my bed.

It doesn't do much in the way of keeping me warm, but it serves as a constant reminder that Pooh, innocence and my childhood are only a dream away.

Reader expresses anger at columnist's unrealistic ideas

Editor,

This is in response to the column by Jeremy Stephens.

I am mad! Let me tell you that straight off. I am mad as hell. I am sick and tired of some of these pompous, so-called intelligent Neanderthals who write in the Collegian. (Not all of them, only some like our friend Mr. Stephens.)

His belief that diversity should not mean skin color but ideas, though rather idealistic, is not real. Instead of pointing fingers at the organizers of the Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, please look into your own self-proclaimed superior white back yard first. Please tell all your white friends, Mr. Stephens, about how diversity is more than skin color.

Tell them that what should be considered diversity is ideas.

How many whites make any effort to understand or even want to find out more about people from other cultures, let alone find out how and what they think?

> "Bias against people based on skin color was a concept that you white people started. Don't spit venom against those who are simply trying to retain their heritage."

How many of you actually want to know the religious connotation behind us Indians' worship of sacred animals instead of snickering just at the thought of it. We at least don't kill them and eat them. How many of you turn up for any of these multicultural activities anyway?

What do you know of the feeling when white people ask you in a very worried tone if you can operate the most ordinary throw-away camera only because you are brown-skinned. What do you know of the insult and humiliation you feel when a close white friend's father asks you if there is television in Bombay — which is one of the most economically forward cities of Asia, if not the world, and then have the audacity to claim ignorance?

Don't talk disparagingly about things you are clueless about. If you don't know something, then shut up about it.

Quit living in a dream world that speaks of no differences based on skin color and face up to reality.

Bias against people based on skin color was a concept that you white people started. Don't spit venom against those who are simply trying to retain their heritage.

Don't call that a race or ethnic bias. Quit whining. Start living for a change.

Chi-rise apartment

COREY RASMUSSEN, senior in finance, visits with a friend on the phone while sprawled on furniture in his room. Although the Delta Chis don't own a house, the apartment building allows them to build a stronger fraternal environment than they would have by living in separate residences.

MIKE SAROW, sophomore in civil engineering, blows into coals to ignite a fire to cook steaks, hamburgers and hot dogs as Anthony McClain, junior in political science, waits with the grill.

WAITING TO GO OUT, Delta Chis Eric Nelson, sophomore in parks and resource management, and John Morland, senior in hotel restaurant management, visit with Ryan Rostine, sophomore in advertising, on the stairs. Rostine, who is not a Delta Chi, said he is able to enjoy the fraternity environment without the commitments.

Tattarax Apartments take place of house for Delta Chi members

STORY BY MIRANDA KENNEDY • PHOTOS BY DARREN WHITLEY

Brian Spence said Tattarax Apartments definitely do not feel like an apartment complex.

Spence, Delta Chi fraternity treasurer, lives with 23 other Delta Chis in seven apartments in Tattarax, which is on Laramie Street behind the Ramada Inn. Two people who live in the building are not Delta Chis.

"You get the best of the fraternity experience of just living together, but you don't have to put up with all the house junk," Jon Daugharthy, Delta Chi president, said.

Jeff Teel, senior in architectural engineering, is one of the two people who live in Tattarax who are not Delta Chis.

A DELTA CHI leaves for Aggieville, which is a block away from the Tattarax Apartments building.

Although Tattarax doesn't feel like an apartment complex, Teel said it doesn't seem like a fraternity house, either.

"I've been in another fraternity house," Teel said. "It really seemed more like a dorm than this."

Teel said he is glad he lives in Tattarax. He said he knew about half the men in the building before he moved in.

"A lot of people thought I was a pledge or something," he said. "But that's false. I'm not."

Teel said he had planned to live in a different place this year, but it fell through. He said Delta Chi had already arranged the situation in Tattarax.

"They just kind of opened up their hearts to me and let me in," he said.

Spence said the situation was set up with McCullough Development Inc., which owns Tattarax. Spence collects all the rent, then he writes one check for the total amount to Delta Chi's Building Corp., which is a group of alumni. The Building Corp. then writes a check to McCullough Development Inc.

Daugharthy said about half the Delta Chis live in Tattarax.

"It's just kind of an intermediate step to being together," he said.

Spence said there is no date set for Delta Chi to get a house.

Daugharthy said, "It's nice to be able to walk across the hall and then still be able to retreat back to your own space."

Teel also said he appreciates the privacy.

"The only reason why I was apprehensive about it was simply because I was living with a bunch of guys who knew each other," he said. "When you're living in an apartment complex, people don't know each other, so that makes them respect each other."

However, he said that has not been a problem.

Spence said people knowing each other makes things run smoother than in a regular apartment complex.

"If there's a problem with noisy people in the building, you feel comfortable talking to them," Spence said.

Teel also said noise or partying has not bothered him.

"My major requires me to study a lot," he said. "I don't want to have to leave my place of residence to study."

Daugharthy said he feels more pride in the building than he would at a regular apartment complex. He picks up trash in the yard even if it isn't his.

He said the central location is also kind of like a fraternity house.

"Even guys who don't live here, they'll come over," Daugharthy said.

Security is also better than in a regular apartment complex, he said.

"Even if you're not here there's always somebody who's going to be here," he said. "So it feels good that way."

But he said there are other things that are different from a fraternity house.

Each apartment has its own feel, Daugharthy said. He said some living rooms are messier than others, and Spence said his has a basketball court taped on the floor.

"You clean your own toilet and cook your own food," Daugharthy said.

Crew begins first season

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State's rowing season officially began Saturday.

The crew team, competing for the first time as a varsity squad, hit the water at the Head of the Kaw Regatta, sponsored by the Kansas City Rowing Club.

Instead of racing head-to-head, boats were given staggered starts and timed to the finish line.

All of K-State's boats were eight-person boats.

The Novice-A boat, made up of first-year rowers, raced first, placing fifth out of eight boats.

Its time of 16:12 on the three-mile course was just 23 seconds behind the leader and 1:22 in front of the sixth-place boat.

"I thought they did pretty well," Coach Jennifer Hale said. "They have only been rowing by eights for four days now, so we've got a little catching up to do."

Because this was the first race of any kind for the novice boat, and the first race as a varsity squad for any of the Wildcats, Hale said winning was not the most important goal of the race.

Rather, she said she hoped the team would steer and propel the boats well.

"We did an excellent job," said Vandy Paul, junior in computer engineering and coxswain of the Novice-A boat. "We rowed well together and did what we set out to do."

Hale said she agreed.

"I think they could maybe have had more power, because I've seen them row with more power in practice," she said. "But they steered a really good course, and overall I'm pleased with this as a first effort."

Two K-State boats competed in the open flight that afternoon.

The Open-B boat placed eighth out of 12 with a time of 15:45 and the Open-A boat placed ninth with a time of 15:57.

The A boat lost time toward the end of the race when it changed course because of a loose buoy.

Course officials used orange buoys to mark hazards.

When one orange buoy came loose, floating to the middle of the race course, the boat steered wide of it, thinking it was a hazard.

One other boat followed the K-State boat before the buoy floated out of sight of the racers.

"We had that steering mistake, and that was unfortunate," Hale said. "But other than that, I think we did well against the other open boats. Our times might not have been at the top, but I think we rowed well."

Kim Bielefeld, sophomore in pre-physical therapy and coxswain of the Open-B boat, said she thought the race went well but that there are improvements to make.

"We need to work on our ratio, slowing the stroke down and quicker on the drive," she said.

Holly Wise, sophomore in elementary education, who is also on the Open-B boat, said she thought the B boat had one of its very best days so far.

"I think it's one of our best rows as far as our boat was concerned," Wise said. "There are things we really need to work on, but it's coming together."

Two K-State novice eights and one novice four were withdrawn from the race, because several members of K-State's team have yet to be cleared for competition by the NCAA Initial Eligibility Clearinghouse.

Hale said she hoped those athletes would be cleared before the Cats leave for their next race, which is the Head of the Iowa in Des Moines on Oct. 27.

"We really need to get those people through, so we can get our full team on the water," Hale said.

"And it'll be interesting to see how we respond up in Des Moines because, for a lot of our boats, they'll have that first race behind them," she said.

Volleyball beats Baylor, loses to Tech

JOHN BERGGREN

The K-State volleyball team split two games during the weekend, moving to 16-3, beating Baylor 3-1 and losing to Texas Tech 2-3.

The Wildcats handled the Bears in the first two games, winning 15-13, 15-8, but came up against an unbeatable performance in the third game, losing 7-15.

Volleyball coach Jim Moore said Baylor played perfectly in the third game.

"They dug everything we hit and played flawless," Moore said. "We made a few mistakes, but I think we woke up for the fourth game."

The Cats came back in the fourth game and buried the Bears 15-1.

Even with the win, one bad thing came out of the match with Baylor.

Senior play-set-hitter Toie Young twisted her ankle in the first game of the match.

This set back prevented her from playing at 100 percent against Texas Tech.

With K-State's star hitter unhealthy, No. 25-ranked Texas Tech jumped out to a 2-0 lead on the Cats, winning 15-12, 15-11.

Moore said the team lost its composure early.

"We came out flat in games one and two," Moore said. "They're a good team, and I think we got flustered and frustrated. I don't think we were prepared for their good blocking, and I'm not sure we were prepared for their intensity."

However, K-State battled back in the third and fourth games and rocked Tech 15-4, 15-4.

"We were able to regroup pretty well," Moore said. "We came back primarily because of two circumstances. We were able to dig ourselves out of a hole, and they were keying on Toie, and they blocked her well early. We were able to stop that."

However, the Wildcats were not able to keep the momentum, losing the final game 15-9.

One individual performance stuck out noticeably for the Cats during the weekend.

Senior middle blocker Kate DeClerk hit .500 in both games.

K-State is back in action this weekend with home contests against Big 12 rivals Iowa State and Missouri. Moore said the team is happy to get a chance to play in Ahearn Field House.

"We feel like we haven't played at home yet," Moore said. "We've only been at home for four days, and we feel like if we can hang in there we could have a huge advantage with all of our home games at the end of the season."

Cats' offense bounces back to trounce MU

COLUMBIA, Mo. — It took a while for K-State's defense to wake up, but once it did, the Wildcats held Missouri to just one touchdown and a field goal in a 35-10 rout at Faurot Field in Columbia on Saturday.

And, after last week's shellacking at the hands of the Nebraska defense, K-State's offensive game came alive — especially the running game, led by running back Mike Lawrence.

For the first time this season, the Tigers scored on their opening drive.

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

MIKE LAWRENCE evades Missouri defenders Saturday at Faurot Field in Columbia, Mo.

It took 12 plays in four minutes and 11 seconds for Missouri to drive 80 yards and put the game's first points on the scoreboard.

"It was a nice opening drive," Coach Bill Snyder said. "They mixed things up quite well, and they ran inside on us too well. I didn't think they could do that."

However, it was the last time the Tigers would find the end zone.

K-State's defense took control of the game.

"We came out, and we were a little flat," cornerback Chris Canty said. "We were on our heels, and it's bad when a defense is on its heels. We just weren't responding well. After that first drive, we got things together."

On K-State's first possession, Canty returned the kickoff 44 yards to give the Cats solid field position at Missouri's 47-yard line.

Nine plays later, Lawrence cruised into the end zone for a 7-yard touchdown run, tying the game at 7-7.

Canty's kickoff return kickstarted the Wildcats' offense, which produced 327 yards, 183 of which came on the ground.

Lawrence amassed 168 yards on 25 carries, averaging 6.7 yards per carry.

"I just went out and played," Lawrence said. "The offensive line did a good job making blocks, and Brian (Kavanagh) did a good job of opening the passing game. That made it easier."

Kavanagh completed nine of 15 passes for 144 yards, including a 44-yard touchdown pass to Andre Anderson late in the first half. He had no interceptions against the Tigers.

But it wasn't so much the successful blocking of K-State's offensive line, Kavanagh's throwing game or even Lawrence's ability to find holes that allowed the Wildcats to be so successful on the ground.

Missouri's rush defense played an integral part in K-State's fifth victory this season, the Tigers' fourth loss.

Going into Saturday's contest, the Tigers' rush defense was ranked 106th in the nation out of 111 programs.

Including the loss to the Wildcats, Missouri has given up 700 yards rushing on only 134 carries in its last three games.

Those opponents averaged 5.96 yards a carry.

The lack of rush defense is a concern for Missouri coach Larry Smith, and he admits it's one that hasn't come along suddenly.

"It's the major problem," Smith said. "And not suddenly. I've been worried about that all season."

Violent crime drops 18 percent nationwide

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Violent crime in large U.S. cities dropped 8 percent in 1995, leading the way for a smaller but less dramatic decline across the nation, the FBI reports.

The bureau's annual crime survey also shows the lowest murder rate in a decade and the lowest overall violent crime rate since 1989.

The survey, released Saturday, was compiled from crimes reported to more than 16,000 law-enforcement agencies covering 95 percent of the nation's population.

With crime an issue in the presidential campaign, President Clinton quickly claimed credit for the decrease.

"Our anti-crime strategy — to put more police on the street while working to get drugs, gangs and guns out of our neighborhoods — is working," he said in a written statement.

The president cautioned, however, that the nation still "must bear down even harder on violent juvenile crime. Last May, I submitted to Congress the Anti-Gang and Youth Violence Control Act of 1996. Enacting that bill's tough new measures is my top anti-crime priority."

Christina Martin, campaign spokesman for Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole, said, "Clinton's words of self-congratulation are a shallow attempt to divert attention from the massive increase in teen drug use under his watch.

"Bob Dole knows the numbers are cause for alarm and will do everything in his power as president to eliminate the scourge of violent crime."

Clinton has often touted his anti-crime law designed to place 100,000 additional police officers on the streets.

Pope makes appearance 5 days after appendectomy

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROME — Joking that the hospital has become Vatican No. 3, Pope John Paul II made his first post-surgery public appearance Sunday but kept his trembling hand — possibly caused by Parkinson's disease — out of sight.

The pope appeared rested and in good spirits five days after an appendectomy, lingering at the window of his 10th-floor suite at Rome's Gemelli Polyclinic hospital even after telling the more than 1,500 pilgrims below, "Now I'm going back to bed."

The 76-year-old pontiff kept his left hand below the sill. Uncontrollable shaking of that hand led to persistent speculation that the pope suffers from Parkinson's, a progressive disorder caused by the deterioration of nerve cells in the brain.

The Vatican spokesman, Joaquin Navarro-Valls, has not denied the reports and has said the pope might suffer from an extrapyramidal syndrome — which includes Parkinson's but also other problems. Other Vatican officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, have said Parkinson's could be a likely diagnosis.

Doctors say the pope has recuperated flawlessly from surgery to remove an inflamed appendix. They admit, however, that other medical specialists are evaluating the pope.

Gemelli doctors refuse to comment on any aspect of the pope's health beyond the recent operation. But they repeatedly have said Parkinson's does not affect mental capacity, and its deterioration on mobility can be slowed.

"If the pope suffers from some other ailment, it's something that cannot be treated with surgery," Dr. Francesco Crucitti, the lead surgeon in the appendectomy, said Sunday.

Volunteers work together to repair woman's house

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

LISA DONALDSON, junior in social work, and Michelle Lynch, executive director of the HOME program, clean and paint 83-year-old Eva Venable's house last weekend. Donaldson is vice president of K-State's Social Work Organization.

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

The pounding hammers in the background did not affect the volunteers' concentration as they painted a local woman's living room early Saturday morning.

K-State's Social Work Organization teamed up with the Home Owners Maintenance and Energy Program to repair 83-year-old Eva Venable's home.

K-State's Social Work Organization has been around for several years, but this is the first project it has done.

The Social Work Organization has about 20 members. Ten members volunteered and teamed up for two-hour shifts Saturday.

"It's been great. You learn how to work with a team and get to help someone in the community," said Liz Schepmann, sophomore in social work and family studies and human services.

Although the HOME program only has three staff members, it is able to cater to 163 clients.

"If it weren't for groups like the social-work club, this wouldn't get done," said Michelle Lynch, director of the HOME program.

The HOME program's goal is to keep low-income home owners in their homes as long as possible, Lynch said.

Average clients are 72 years old, with an income of $500 to $800 a month. Most of their income comes from Social Security, Lynch said.

"When you talk about low-income home owners in this community, you're talking about the elderly," Lynch said.

The HOME program is a not-for-profit organization that relies on donations from local businesses. It inspects the homes for smoke and carbon-monoxide detectors, completes daily tasks and whatever pertains to home maintenance or prevention of deterioration, Lynch said.

Local social workers refer needy home owners to the HOME program. Lynch has made several visits to Venable's home since she became a client.

"I don't know how she found me, but she's very nice. There's no way in the world I could have gotten it done," Venable said.

When clients need assistance around the home, they call the HOME program. They get to the problem as soon as they can, said Kathy Pennell, sophomore in social work and family studies.

Pennell, secretary for the HOME program, said her goal was to get as much done as possible and show Eva there are people who care.

Venable's home was in need of a thorough cleaning and a new paint job.

Rob MacDougal Sr., senior in social work, and Rob MacDougal Jr., sophomore in social work, teamed up on the living room wall, while Tosha Whitfield, junior in social work and family studies, painted the bathroom ceiling and walls.

"I'm glad that there are people that help people who need help," Whitfield said.

Saturday was not the first time the MacDougals had worked together. They had class together last year and said they liked it. They said they plan to continue to volunteer.

"We're just getting the ball rolling," MacDougal Jr. said.

John Hooks, maintenance supervisor for the HOME program, is the only non-volunteer on the work force.

The program does a variety of repair work, from replacing flooring and outer walls to minor plumbing, roofing and structural repairs, Hooks said.

KU fraternity reprimanded for hazing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — A University of Kansas fraternity has been reprimanded for depriving new members of sleep in a form of hazing, school officials said.

Delta Tau Delta, which was placed on two years' probation, will have to complete a 12-point plan of corrective measures before the chapter can regain good standing at the university. Potential punishment ranged from probation, the least severe, to suspension and expulsion, the most severe.

"Hazing, regardless of its severity, will not be tolerated," said James Kitchen, Kansas' dean of student life. No injuries were reported.

Probation doesn't restrict the fraternity from participating in official university activities.

The fraternity accepted responsibility for the hazing and won't appeal the ruling. The fraternity's international body is still investigating the case, said Chris Garrelts, chapter president.

"It was an isolated incident, and we are very sorry that it happened," Garrelts said. "We have taken the appropriate steps to correct this situation internally."

Among other steps, Delta Tau Delta must coordinate all activities and meet regularly with university staff, and require all members to sign a statement affirming they will follow anti-hazing policies. The fraternity must inform members' parents of the probation, and sponsor a philanthropic project with proceeds directed toward an organization dedicated to preventing hazing.

Punishment of Delta Tau Delta comes amid the university's efforts to crack down on hazing.

In April, Alpha Epsilon was placed on two years' probation for humiliating a pledge during a hazing ritual in October 1995. In a November 1995 case, a student was found wrapped in cellophane from shoulder to knee in front a women's residence hall. The student blamed the incident on pledge brothers at his fraternity.

Another fraternity, Delta Chi, was sanctioned in September 1995 after two sophomores were forced to overexert themselves in 99-degree heat after consuming alcohol. One person suffered kidney failure. The university suspended Delta Chi for one year as a registered student organization. The fraternity's national organization issued a two-year suspension.

Cast powerfully recreates Chekhov's 'Uncle Vanya'

Russell Fortmeyer
senior staff writer

A wasted life fraught with sacrifice for no gain.

Uncle Vanya has come to K-State, and his name is Dan Shea.

K-State Theatre's new production of Anton Chekhov's "Uncle Vanya" is an ambitious show fueled by Shea's remarkably mature performance.

Chekhov's masterpiece remains among the more powerful plays, maintaining its relevance even for an audience of college students who are, for the most part, optimistically facing the beginning of their lives.

Unfortunately for Vanya and his demented melange of friends and family, the joys of life are fleeting, little is left to cherish, and old friends are suddenly cast in a tragic light.

The play centers on a man, Vanya, who has spent his entire life (a bit of an overstatement because he's in his 40s) managing an estate and grounds for a brilliant intellectual, Professor Serebryakov, who in old age is revealed to be a sham. Vanya's personal contribution to society is, in essence, null and void. When he could have been a productive intellectual himself, his sacrifices led him elsewhere.

Of course, a play would hardly be a play without a little love, jealousy and ambition thrown into the mix — and Chekhov's masterpiece delivers.

It helps to have a wonderful cast supporting the roles with an effortless sense of genuine understanding, save a few spoilsports.

Jason Miller is no less than outstanding as the intelligently idealistic doctor who sweeps Yelena, the professor's young wife, off her feet at the disgust of Vanya, who secretly wishes to rekindle his desires of her.

Miller and Shea are cause to celebrate, for a failure on their parts to deliver their characters would be doom for the play. Both have a rare gift for meaningful and authentic expression.

Christopher Piatt (the professor) carefully builds his performance to a no-holds-barred climax — breaking glass and all — for the chilling final confrontation between himself and Vanya. Gasps could be heard in the audience.

Other notable performances are given by Diana Kate Smith, the poorly-understood professor's daughter, and Brad Good, as a sort of Dana Carvey-esque old man.

This strange suggestion of Carvey is all part of a weirdly concocted funk that energizes the show.

It's probably owed much to Dana Pinkston's choice to modernize the costumes, Charlotte MacFarland's consistently excellent direction, and David Centers' decision to leave the furnishings turn-of-the-century.

The set design is, by far, the most contentious point of the production. I'm not particularly convinced any of it is necessary.

Scenic designer David Centers never fails to create an excellent set — sometimes so much so the set, not the play, is worth the price of admission. However, in Vanya, the Monument Valley desertscape, hovering orbs and sandy stage do little but distract.

The play, thanks to Chekhov's choice of little specificity, retains its universality without needing the crutch of an over-referentialing set to punch it home.

However, there are bright spots in the set.

The multi-level platforms, faux-suspended from the ceiling, create a sense of volume and give presence to the rooms as spaces. It gives the sense that the walls of a home have melted away, leaving remnants and allowing us the chance to peek into the lives of a very disturbed family.

Sawyer talks politics

Sera Tank
staff writer

People don't take advantage of the power they have, Tom Sawyer, Kansas House minority leader, said Friday during the second of four lectures for Hispanic Heritage Month.

"I think it's very important that we take advantage of our power and vote," Sawyer said. "If we don't take advantage of it, it's not a good thing. People who oppose us can take advantage of it."

Sawyer said Hispanics have been attacked by laws in Kansas, and there were four recent attacks. The first was associated with California's controversial Proposition 187, which took rights away from illegal immigrants.

Sawyer said there was a similar bill introduced to the Kansas Legislature in 1995 and 1996. Both times it was defeated.

"It was a difficult battle, but we won," he said. "That's a battle we're going to continue to fight."

The second attack came when Gov. Bill Graves, who Sawyer said was ill-advised on the subject, issued an executive reorganization order to abolish the Kansas Advisory Committee for Hispanic Affairs.

The committee is a nine-member board appointed by the governor that helps Hispanic Americans become involved in politics.

Sawyer said the executive reorganization order was fought and defeated.

"It's very rare for the governor to lose an ERO," he said.

The third attack was qualified admissions. Sawyer said he was opposed to the bill and fought against it. That battle was recently lost.

Finally, Sawyer said, there was the debate on state funding for bilingual education in Kansas. A bill was introduced to take away that funding.

He said that bill was defeated, but the battle is not over.

"It's a battle we'll have to fight again next year," he said.

Sawyer said these attacks are taking place not only at the state level, but also at the national level with proposals such as Congress pushing a national English-only law.

Sawyer

"To me, it's amazing that people are promoting this. I think we should be doing more to help people preserve their heritage — not the opposite," he said.

Other national-level attacks include Pat Buchanan's proposal of a wall between Mexico and the United States and Bob Dole's push against affirmative action.

"I believe we are under assault," Sawyer said.

Sawyer said the reasons for this assault are politics, fear and apathy.

"A lot of people are to appeal to the angry white males," he said.

Sawyer said the best way to fight these attacks is to use the power of a vote. He also said it is especially important for Hispanics to use the power to vote in the upcoming November elections.

"This is an election that will decide if we go forward or we go backwards," he said. "I can't urge you enough to use your power and vote in this election."

Strait entertains full house in Kansas City

David Katzer
staff reporter

For the country-music purist, it doesn't get any better than George Strait. His mellow style brought a capacity crowd to Kansas City's Kemper Arena on Saturday night.

Strait doesn't use a lot of flash to attract his audience. In fact, he doesn't really use any. No smoke, no elaborate pyrotechnics and no surprises have become his trademark. The 1996 Country Music Association Male Vocalist of the Year didn't change his game plan for the Kansas City, Mo., show. He came, he sang, they screamed.

Remember a guy named Fonzie? That guy isn't suave enough to drive George Strait's tour bus. Strait's on-stage persona oozes cool. A grin turns the audience into a screaming, raging ball of energy. A simple shuffle of his boots brings spectators to their feet. He doesn't do any zany antics on stage because he doesn't have to.

After appearing from the tunnel in the wings of the auditorium, Strait, dressed in his standard black cowboy hat and starched Wrangler jeans and shirt, strolled onstage and began singing. Three songs later, he simply said, "Thank you, Kansas City," and kept playing.

Audience members don't hear about Strait's life story when he is performing. He doesn't say much at all, letting his music do the talking. What he does provide is a wealth of hits that offer a good mix between ballad and up-tempo.

Songs, both old and new, like "Heartland" and "Blue Clear Sky" offered excellent contrast to favorites "I Cross My Heart" and "Carried Away." Strait played songs from his new album, "Clear Blue Sky," and some classics from the past like "The Chair" and "Amarillo By Morning."

Aided by four jumbo screens elevated on the sides of the stage, every seat allowed a close-up view of the star. Strait's voice range was clean and pure, except when muffled by the outbursts from the fans.

Two hours later, Strait gave the screaming audience an encore after the performance. "Fireman" and "This Is Where The Cowboy Rides Away" seemed to quench the crowd's thirst, although Strait was nearly pulled off the stage into the front row while shaking hands with the fans.

Country music's king of cool was assisted Saturday night by new star on the country-music scene, Terri Clark. Belting out her current single, "Poor, Poor, Pitiful Me" and earlier releases, "When Boy Meets Girl" and "I Got Better Things To Do," Clark built excitement in the crowd. Clark's style is more energetic than Strait's. She got the audience involved by jumping around the stage and clapping her hands.

Play crosses cultures

LILIAN BEEBE
staff reporter

William Shakespeare is dead, but his work is immortal.

The Haworth Shakespeare Festival's performance of "Romeo and Juliet" proved that.

"All the world's a stage, and all men and women merely players," is the right sentiment taken from the wrong play.

Friday's performance was done by an African American cast. They took Shakespeare's tale of star-crossed lovers to a different level.

Verona moved to South Africa for the evening.

The feud was not just between two families anymore. It was between two political parties, the Zulu supporters of the African National Congress and the Zulu supporters of the Inkatha Freedom Party.

To go deeper, it could be a feud between two different religions and ways of life.

The play didn't present this up front. You had to read the program. But with this in mind, you could see how Shakespeare can cross cultural boundaries.

In traditional Shakespeare style, few props were used, and the focus was on the words.

The feeling of South Africa was achieved with music, dress and simple scenery pieces that were lowered from the ceiling.

The acting was excellent.

Juliet, played by Julie Saunders, and Romeo, played by Fidel Nanton, were wonderful. The love, anguish, separation and resulting deaths couldn't have been played any better, with one exception.

Both actors knew their lines and their characters, but in a few instances would get caught up in the moment and speak too quickly.

Most audiences aren't used to listening to a play written in verse. It takes some thinking and careful listening. If both actors would have slowed down just a little, the audience would have grasped even more of the play.

Two audience favorites were Mercutio, played by Antony Bunsee and Nurse, played by Anni Domingo.

The audience had good taste. Domingo and Bunsee injected hilarity and open sexuality. They lightened the mood and made the audience laugh out loud.

Shakespeare wrote plays about human beings and the emotions of the heart and soul. He left very few stage directions and casting instructions.

He wrote his plays with specific audiences in mind, but with the whole audience in mind at once.

So if we can all enjoy it from the audience, why can't we all enjoy it from the stage? We can. Again, Friday's performance proved that.

As an ensemble, the cast created the play for the audience. They started where Shakespeare stopped and went forward.

They made the facets of Shakespeare's plays visible. They made me see a new "Romeo and Juliet" that night. I only wish they would have done one more curtain call for another standing ovation.

SHAKESPEARE'S "ROMEO AND JULIET" was taken to a higher level to portray two South African political parties rather than two families in Verona. The play was performed by an African American cast as part of the Haworth Shakespeare Festival.

Museum construction

The following story is a question-and-answer session between Russell Fortmeyer, senior staff writer, and Nelson Britt, director of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art

Fortmeyer

Britt

Fortmeyer: What are the challenges you've had to overcome during the construction, moving-in, and setting-up phase of the museum?

Britt: I think the real challenge is that we were supposed to take the building over July 1, and the real challenge was not to change the date of the opening and to live within the time-frame we allowed to do the things we wanted to do — to keep the momentum up.

I think it was a challenge for the whole staff to keep morale up. Everyone was in good faith, but we had subcontractors in here we just couldn't get out of the building.

Fortmeyer: What's been the biggest accomplishment of the museum so far?

Britt: Putting together an outstanding staff over the past year. That was a major accomplishment. Their energy level has been 120 percent. You have to understand I have six people that have come from all walks of life, and now we're living together.

Fortmeyer: Is the physical building what you expected it to be?

Britt: And above. I was involved in the design of this building. I worked very closely with the architect. When we had to cut, I was right there, involved. The administration area is considerably smaller. So, there's no surprises here. Being so close to the project, yes, the building is what I expected it to be.

I'd like to get away from it for about two weeks and not see it and then come back and look at it. I've always said, from the model to the finished building, it's a beautiful building put on a beautiful site. I never doubted it from the beginning it would be any different.

Fortmeyer: What's held up the opening the most?

Britt: When you look at the architectural drawings, you realize this is a complex building.

Every one of the main subcontractors took a great deal of pride in what they were doing. I might have caused it because I told the subcontractors to do it, do it right, so you don't have to come back and fix it. That might have caused some delays right there.

Fortmeyer: Did you and the staff's planning over the past years prepare you well for the construction and opening of the museum?

Britt: It's been very stressful for us, but I've worked with three other museum directors that have gone through the same process, and there are no surprises. I get no sympathy from those other directors.

Fortmeyer: How much is the museum over budget and how much was that expected?

Britt: We're over budget, but we generally projected a while back that we were going to go over budget. We were using our contingency fund. We exceeded that contingency fund by a considerable amount. We went over budget not on mistakes, but on making the building better.

We are capable of paying all our bills, and that is not going to affect programs, exhibitions or museum activities. Because of the construction of the building, we did not sacrifice exhibits or educational programs. I would never allow that to happen.

Fortmeyer: Are you ready for the hordes of visitors?

Britt: No. We're ready. I'm looking forward to having people come into the museum and get acquainted with the museum.

I anticipate complaints, but I also anticipate a lot of compliments.

Recruitment video to promote greeks, give new students closer look at system

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

Greek Affairs is filming a video that will be used for recruitment as soon as next semester.

The six- to eight-minute video will be the first of its kind to promote the greek system. Greek Affairs now relies on written publications and personal meetings with prospective students to answer questions about greek life.

Bernie Haney, senior in electronic journalism and recruitment coordinator of Interfraternity Council, is organizing production of the video.

"The main purpose of the video is to give incoming K-State students a first-hand look at what the greek experience is about," he said.

Haney said the primary target audience for the video will be new students who are undecided about giving the greek system a shot.

The goal of the video is to portray the positive experiences of greek life, how students can benefit in the present and future with involvement, and how friendships develop.

Barb Robel, adviser for Greek Affairs, said the film should dispel some misconceptions of greek life. She said being able to view the inside of some of the houses will let students see that it's a place where people really live and have a good time.

Coverage will include footage of greek houses inside and out, philanthropy activities, intramurals, Homecoming and interviews of students in greek houses.

Haney said two shoots are complete and cost about $700. The next filming, of intramural activities, will be from 5 to 7 p.m. Tuesday, and a final filming will take place during Homecoming. Production of the video will follow with projected completion by Jan. 9.

Boyce's Studio Productions Inc. is filming and producing the video. The expected total cost is around $3,000.

Haney said financial support will come from sponsorship throughout Manhattan in return for recognition in the video and in greek publications the "Fraternity Experience" and the "Sorority Way."

If money does not turn up through local sponsorship, it will come from IFC and Panhellenic Council dues. Haney said alumni also might be targeted for support. Going to Student Governing Association for financial assistance will be a last resort, he said.

The film is expected to be used for five to six years. Once the video is completed, needed changes should be easy to make in the future. The video will include a voice-over script and music background.

To reach prospective greeks, the video will be displayed at the All-University Open House, summer orientation and during Greek Affairs office visits. Haney said Greek Affairs hopes to be able to send the video with admissions representatives when they visit high schools.

"I think it is going to spur a lot of questions by parents and students," Haney said. He said the stimulation of questions would be a good tool to break communication barriers between greek representatives and prospectives, making conversation easier.

Different K-State students meet with prospective students in the Greek Affairs office. Showing the video during meetings will ensure that all prospective students get the same information.

"I think it is going to be a supplement to the personal visits in the office," Haney said.

Through interviews of those experiencing greek living, the film will describe friendships, ways students' college experiences have been enhanced because of greek involvement and reasons parents should want their children to become a part of the greek system.

"We want to show the unity of the greek system," Haney said. "We all do stuff as one — like Homecoming and philanthropies."

will be the heart of K-State, the art museum will be the soul of K-State," Wefald said.

Concluding, Wefald thanked the two most important supporters of the new art museum, Ross and Marianna Beach, of Hays.

"It took two angels to come along and make it finally realized," Wefald said.

"They said, let's do it, let's make it happen, let's build a first-rate, world-class Kansas State University art museum," Wefald said, "and we'll always be eternally grateful."

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to the president and host of the ceremonies, did the most thanking of the afternoon with his nods to the donors.

Also in attendance was Regent Kenneth Havner, of Hays, who thanked the donors and happily accepted the building into the Regents' system, because the art museum, until recently, was owned by the KSU Foundation.

Concerning the museum, Havner said, "It will remain a tribute to a lady dedicated to the arts, excellence in education and to the citizens of Kansas."

The list of people in attendance reads like a who's who of local and regional arts supporters and K-State luminaries.

Artist Dean Mitchell, whose work is the subject of one of three inaugural exhibits, attended with his family.

and went into the bathroom. When she left the bathroom, Saez said she noticed the alleged victim's door was shut and the light was off, whereas before, the door was open and the light was on.

"I thought he was gone already," Saez reported to the Riley County Police, "but then I saw him underneath the sheets on top of (alleged victim). This guy was kissing her on her neck and grabbing her chest."

Saez said she then tried to pull Wallace away from the alleged victim, but he wouldn't listen to her. Saez said she woke the alleged victim up and took her to a different room.

"I remembered that I was sleeping, and someone was touching me on my breast," the alleged victim reported to police. "I thought that I was dreaming, but then (Saez) came and woke me up."

The alleged victim said Saez explained to her what was happening.

"Then I went into my room and told him that he had to leave, but he did not do anything. When I saw him, he did not have his shirt on," the alleged victim said.

"Then we went outside, and some friends of our neighbors helped us take him out. When he got out of the house, he ran away," the alleged victim said.

Later, after some of their friends arrived at the alleged victim's apartment, she said one of the friends called the police, and Wallace was arrested after they identified him in the Royal Purple yearbook.

Aggravated sexual battery, a felony, is the intentional touching of another person who is 16 years or older.

A victim of sexual battery does not consent to arouse or satisfy the sexual desires of the offender under a variety of circumstances.

According to the law, a sexual battery can occur when the victim is incapable of giving consent due to mental illness or the influence of alcohol or drugs.

with a brother.

"We have had the swing tournament for almost a decade. We always look forward to working with these guys," she said.

Many of the judges for the competition were supplied from the campus community, Brown said, with most coming from the speech department. At any given time there were 30 judges working, and there was a total of more than 50.

"Any intelligent human being can listen to a speech and listen for communication and creativity," he said. "Any of the speeches can be given to a general audience."

The K-State began competing the last week of September and will continue through April. During the school year it goes out almost every weekend, except for holidays.

Brown said any full-time undergraduate student can compete.

"We've had people from every college on campus," he said.

Ric Shafer, senior in speech, has been competing at K-State for three years. He helped tabulate. Throughout the semester he works with peer coaching, mainly with public-speaking competitors.

"One of the best things about the squad is that it's like an extended family," Shafer said.

Shafer said this weekend was different, because normally everyone has to commute between the two schools. With both schools at K-State it was a new experience. People could socialize.

"I've made a lot of friendships on the squad. These people are the best friends I'll ever have," he said.

Katherine Brown, freshman in English, competed in prose.

"I really liked it. Today was fun. Anybody can do it," she said.

Ebony Clemons, freshman in political science, competed in the program of oral interpretations. She said it was different from high school.

"It's definitely challenging. You have to keep practicing, but the older students are supportive," she said.

in the classroom. He uses film, interactive videodiscs and CD-ROMs to give students hands-on experience.

"I saw students' anxieties, fear and sometimes even hostility toward physics," Zollman said. "What I wanted to do was go out and get some real-life situations where we could apply the physics in everyday life."

Legg said Zollman has laid the groundwork for new concepts in physics and is a model to other physics professors across the country.

"He has pioneered many of the programs for analyzing and utilizing video-image technology," Legg said. "He was doing that 10 to 15 years before most people knew about it."

Zollman's ability to develop new and innovative ways to teach physics has earned him local and national honors.

Honors Zollman has won include the Fulbright Fellowship to develop teaching materials at the University of Munich in 1989, and the Robert A. Millikan Medal for outstanding contributions to physics teaching from the American Association of Physics Teaching.

Attorney General Janet Reno attributed the improvement to "many different causes, including our bipartisan efforts to give local law enforcement the tools they need to combat crime."

Reno warned, however, "This is no time to rest on our laurels. Crime is still too high."

The findings for 1995 showed an 8 - percent drop in violent crimes for a second consecutive year in the 1-million-plus cities: Phoenix, Los Angeles, San Diego, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, Dallas and Houston.

Violent crimes include murder, forcible rape, robbery and aggravated assault.

Nationally, the number of violent crimes dropped 3 percent as the rate of violent crimes per 100,000 population declined 4 percent.

The number of crimes covered in the FBIs reporting system was 13.9 million in 1995, representing 5,278 offenses for every 100,000 inhabitants.

The number of reported crimes of all types was down 1 percent from a year earlier, while the crime rate declined 2 percent per 100,000, the study said.

POPE

In the five-minute appearance, the pope poked fun at the time he has spent at Gemelli. Last week's operation was his sixth there.

"I warmly welcome everyone here at Vatican No. 3," said the pope, calling the papal country villa outside Rome "Vatican No. 2."

Doctors expect the pope to be discharged early this week, possibly Tuesday.

Poles waved the red and white flags of solidarity, which the pope supported against the communist government during the early years of his papacy. Italians shouted, "Long live the pope."

Damon's lawsuit fails; court rules it untimely

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

David Damon will probably not be taking classes at K-State anytime soon.

The lawsuit the former K-State linebacker filed against K-State appealing his May 1996 dismissal from the University was thrown out of Geary County District Court last week.

Damon

Jennifer Kassebaum, senior assistant University attorney, said the lawsuit was thrown out on the basis that it was untimely. She said Damon had 30 days after he was dismissed from the University to file a suit but didn't file until August.

"We are very pleased with the court's decision," she said.

Kassebaum said Damon's lawsuit asked that the University be temporarily and permanently enjoined, or that the University would have to let Damon enroll in classes at K-State.

Kassebaum said Damon can still appeal the court's decision if he chooses, but he was unavailable for comment.

Labette seeking PSU merger

▪ Colleges investigate where additional funding would come from.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — It didn't take a legislative study committee long to focus on its key concern over the proposed merging of Labette County Community College with Pittsburg State University. It is money.

PSU President John Darling and LCCC President Joe Birmingham spent more than an hour Monday explaining the proposed affiliation of the two-year school in Parsons with the regents university in Pittsburg to the Legislative Educational Planning Committee, then answered questions.

Those questions centered on where the $4.52 million in additional state funding proposed for LCCC would come from, and whether many of the 18 other community colleges in Kansas would want to do the same thing with other regents schools — and where all that money would come from.

Darling said Pittsburg State is interested in the affiliation, but not if it means carving the money out of its budget or taking any funding from the regents system.

Darling said Labette County, which is one of Kansas' smaller community colleges with a full-time equivalent enrollment of about 1,500 students, initiated the effort to join forces with Pittsburg State, not the other way around.

"We're not a big university trying to take over a community college," he said to the committee.

"Why would Pittsburg State University want to be involved? It's for two reasons.

"One is our commitment to be of service to the higher-education needs of the communities of southeast Kansas," Darling said. "The other is this is not an unusual model. It's been done elsewhere ... and it's worked very satisfactorily."

Birmingham said the initiative began in April 1993, and the present conceptual proposal was put together this year.

Monday was the first time a legislative committee has seen the plan outlined, and the reaction was mixed.

"All of this sets a precedent," said Sen. Audrey Langworthy, R-Prairie Village, chairwoman of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee. "When you've got one community college saying, 'Whoopee, we're getting out from under the property tax,' then a lot of the others are going to want to follow suit.

"Why would the state want to take on the burden of a great deal of extra funding?"

But Sen. Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg, and others, said the concept is important as the state reassesses its higher education system.

"People do see merit in this," Martin said, "But there are a lot of questions. Are we going to be asked to cut a bigger slice of the pie for this particular institution?"

The two schools explained the proposal to the Kansas Board of Regents at its mid-September meeting in Hays, and got qualified support for the concept of the merger, Darling told the LEPC.

High-school students taste college experience at K-State-Salina

High-school juniors and seniors from across Kansas were given the opportunity to experience college life Monday.

As part of K-State-Salina's "A Day in the Life" program, high-school upperclassmen were invited to spend Sunday and Monday at the campus. They were housed in the residence hall with current students Sunday night, and Monday they could attend classes or talk with administrators and professors about the school.

"It helps a lot because students can see what college is like and what they are getting into," Robin Brus, freshman in the professional pilots program, said. "They can interact with students and ask them what they think of the school."

This is the fourth year K-State-Salina's student ambassadors have sponsored the event, but this year saw a number of changes.

In previous years, students were invited down once a year, usually after spring break. This year, the event will take place twice. Most of the students attending for the fall session were high-school seniors, and juniors will attend in the spring.

Joey Bahr, freshman in computer information systems technology and a student ambassador, attended the event last year as a high-school senior and said the change was good for high-schoolers.

"At that time, it was offered right after spring break. I had already pretty much decided to come here," he said. "I came here more to get a better idea of the school, to scout it out.

"Having juniors come in the spring is helpful, because a lot of students like to be decided before their senior year."

Bahr also said the change of Sunday-night entertainment was good. After a volleyball match and dinner in the student cafeteria, the prospective students were invited to watch Jimmy Door, a comedian sponsored by the K-State-Salina Student Governing Association.

"Last year there was a caterer. I thought, 'Wow, they serve food this good in the student cafeteria all the time?' But afterward we just watched 'Tommy Boy' and hung out," Bahr said.

Although he agreed the comedian was a good thing to have for the students, Matt Wagner, student body president, said he wasn't prepared for some of the sexually explicit humor.

"We didn't know what his routine was going to be like. We'll hope nothing bad comes from it," Wagner said. "It threw me for a curve, especially because of all the high-school students, but it was funny."

Brus said she didn't think the high-school students would be offended by anything the comedian said.

"They are going to be freshmen in college next year," she said. "It wasn't anything they probably haven't heard before."

The most significant change was the schedule

Ryun campaign runs to Ramada

Jim Ryun had a campaign fund-raiser at the Ramada Inn Monday, and it was attended by about 45 supporters.

Ryun encouraged the audience members, who paid $25 a plate for the benefit, to make a difference.

"What can one vote do?" he said. "If you can get enough one votes together, it can make a difference."

U.S. Rep. J.C. Watts, R-Okla., was the keynote speaker at the luncheon.

"Friends, we are in a battle for the economic and spiritual soul of this country," Watts said.

Watts' message focused on using common sense and family values in government.

"I believe that's what it's going to take to sustain the greatness of America," Watts said. "It's going to take men like Jim Ryun, who are much more concerned about being called daddy than they are in being called congressman."

Audience members said they agreed with this assessment of Ryun's character.

"Our family has known the Ryun family for many years," Cathy Mowry, Manhattan resident, said. "They are people who are connected with productive causes in their community. They improve things wherever they are. It is easy for me to imagine Jim Ryun as a congressman making things better for this country."

Watts also said money should be given back to the states so they can tailor-fit programs that meet their needs.

"When we talk about giving you back your money to let you do what you need to do with it, they are threatened by that. They like one-size-fits-all," Watts said of other lawmakers.

The average family with two children pays about 45 cents of every dollar to taxes, Watts said.

Common sense says the people back home know more about budgeting their money, he said.

Basketball season? Already?

K-State students armed with camping necessities will check in from 7 to 9 this morning on the north and east sides of Ahearn Field House to see what order they will be able to buy season basketball tickets in. The drawing will be Thursday evening, with men's basketball coach Tom Asbury pulling the numbers.

Marcia Hellwig, chair of the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee and graduate student in accounting, said there is a lot of tradition in the campout.

"It's something that has been going on for a long time," Hellwig said. "My parents told me about it during the '60s and '70s."

Things have changed since the initial basketball campouts, however. Four years ago, the campout became an organized event to make it safer and more effective.

"We switched it to an organized event so that it could be kept under control," Hellwig said. "The whole thing used to not be organized, and people would campout with mobile homes a month before the drawing. We also did it so we could keep alcohol out and make things like rape a much less liability to the University."

This morning, about 40 groups will check in, which is fewer than there have been in the past few years.

"The demand has dropped over the last few years with the team's success," Hellwig said. "I'm excited about this year, and hopefully, the numbers will be up with K-State's appearance in the NCAA tournament last year."

Current sales also show ticket numbers are down. Students have reserved 1,600 tickets this year, compared with the 6,000 tickets that were sold in the first year at Bramlage Coliseum.

State Board of Education candidates debate public-school control, QPA effectiveness

BRANDI HERTIG
staff writer

Eloise Lynch, a democrat from Salina, and Scott Hill, a republican from Abilene, candidates for the State Board of Education, debated in Bluemont Hall last night.

The candidates discussed issues ranging from who should have control of public schools to the effectiveness of the Quality Performance Accreditation program, which evaluates public schools.

Though the candidates agreed on some issues, such as the value of teaching reading, writing and arithmetic in elementary schools, they disagreed on who should be in control of public schools.

Hill said control of public schools should stay within local governing bodies.

He said public schools being run by a force other than the local body was like having only one size of clothes to wear.

"Some districts, it fits really good. It was made for them perfectly. Other districts, it's way too loose on them. Other districts, it's way too tight on them," he said.

Hill said the solution to this problem would be the state board's enabling local boards to "design their suit of clothing so it fits them right."

Lynch said it is the duty of the state to take on the responsibility of education for the local levels.

The constitution gives the state basic responsibility of education. The local levels of government are creatures of the state, she said.

Lynch said that she doesn't trust local government to be in control because of the number of people who don't understand the issues.

The candidates also disagreed

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• AIDS PROTESTERS TOSS URNS ON WHITE HOUSE LAWN. More than 300 AIDS activists were forced from in front of the White House by police on horseback after protesters threw urns with what they said were human ashes onto the lawn. ACT UP characterized the demonstration as a political funeral to protest President Clinton's AIDS policies and to press demands including guaranteed access to anti-AIDS medications, more AIDS research and a federally funded needle-exchange program for drug addicts.

• FIGHT CONTINUES TO CONTAIN BIG SUR FIRE. Firefighters surrounded the majority of a fire that charred 14,300 acres of steep terrain in the scenic Big Sur Monday. The 2,100-member fire crew was able to use helicopters and planes to bring the blaze to 80 percent containment, with full containment by fire lines expected tonight. At least six firefighters were injured. Investigators believe the fire, which began Oct. 7, was started by an arsonist.

• KURDS GAIN NEW GROUND. A Kurdish faction claimed new gains Monday in a push through northern Iraq, and the U.S. and Iraqi governments were put in the curious position of agreeing on something: The feuding Kurds should settle their differences to keep the conflict from spreading. The new fighting is in the same area where Iraqi troops intervened in late August, triggering an American missile attack on Saddam Hussein's forces in southern Iraq. Iraq, which claims Iran is backing one Kurdish faction, has warned Iran to keep out of the latest fighting. The United States says both Iraq and Iran should stay out of the new fighting.

• CATHOLICS, PROTESTANTS TAKE STEP TOWARD PEACE. Northern Ireland's biggest Protestant and Roman Catholic parties struck a deal Monday on the who, what and when of peace talks — the first real agreement since negotiations began four months ago. The consensus was reached between the talks' two critical players: the Ulster Unionists, the main pro-British Protestant party, and the Social Democratic and Labor Party, which represents two-thirds of the north's Catholic minority.

CITY STATE

• FORT HAYS TO GUARANTEE DEGREES IN FOUR YEARS TO NEW STUDENTS. Fort Hays State University announced Monday it is going on record guaranteeing that students who major in most of its programs and follow the advised course will receive degrees in four years.

"We're doing this because the price tag for a college degree has gone through the roof for students, parents and the state of Kansas," FHSU president Edward Hammond said. Hammond said Gov. Bill Graves, the Legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents have encouraged this approach.

SPORTS

• TWO COLORADO BASKETBALL PLAYERS SUSPENDED. Buffaloes' guards Chauncey Billups and Howard Frier were suspended Monday for three of Colorado's first six games for misusing university telephone calling cards. Twelve Colorado football players were suspended for calling-card misuse before Saturday's game against Oklahoma State. Six missed Saturday's game, three will sit out this Saturday against Kansas, and three others were suspended for both games. The players have been ordered to pay for their phone bills.

• ROSGA, ALLEN NAMED BIG 12 PLAYERS OF THE WEEK. Colorado senior safety Steve Rosga's career-high 19 tackles against Oklahoma State has prompted the Big 12 Conference to recognize him as defensive player of the week. Rosga was also credited with a touchdown-saving hit on a fourth-down play. Oklahoma halfback James Allen was offensive player of the week for his season-high 159-yard rushing performance on 23 carries and one touchdown against Texas in the Sooners' 30-27 upset Saturday.

Classes present options

DARCIE MCCONKEY

K-State classes have been in session for seven weeks, but students still have the opportunity to enroll in classes and obtain the credits they have been seeking.

The Division of Continuing Education offers eight-week sessions of courses at K-State-Fort Riley. There will be 45 undergraduate courses offered during the upcoming session, which starts Oct. 28.

Laine Schweller, sophomore in elementary education and French, is taking Expository Writing II through the Fort Riley program.

She said she likes it because the atmosphere is different, and she will have credit at the end of eight weeks, instead of the usual semester.

"I thought the class would be a lot easier, but in actuality, we have to cram so much work into only eight weeks. The pace is a lot faster, but I'm glad I'm getting it over with," Schweller said.

Melinda Sinn, public-information coordinator for continuing education, said she thinks K-State students benefit from the program.

"It's a great way for students to pick up hours outside of regular classes. Also, if a student needs to fulfill a requirement or drops a class, it allows them an opportunity to squeeze in those credits," Sinn said.

For More Information, contact the Division of Continuing Education at 532-5566.

Ruth Stanley, director of the Fort Riley Division of Continuing Education, said she agreed with Sinn's perspective.

"This program provides smaller classes in a shorter period of time, which I believe is very attractive to students," Stanley said.

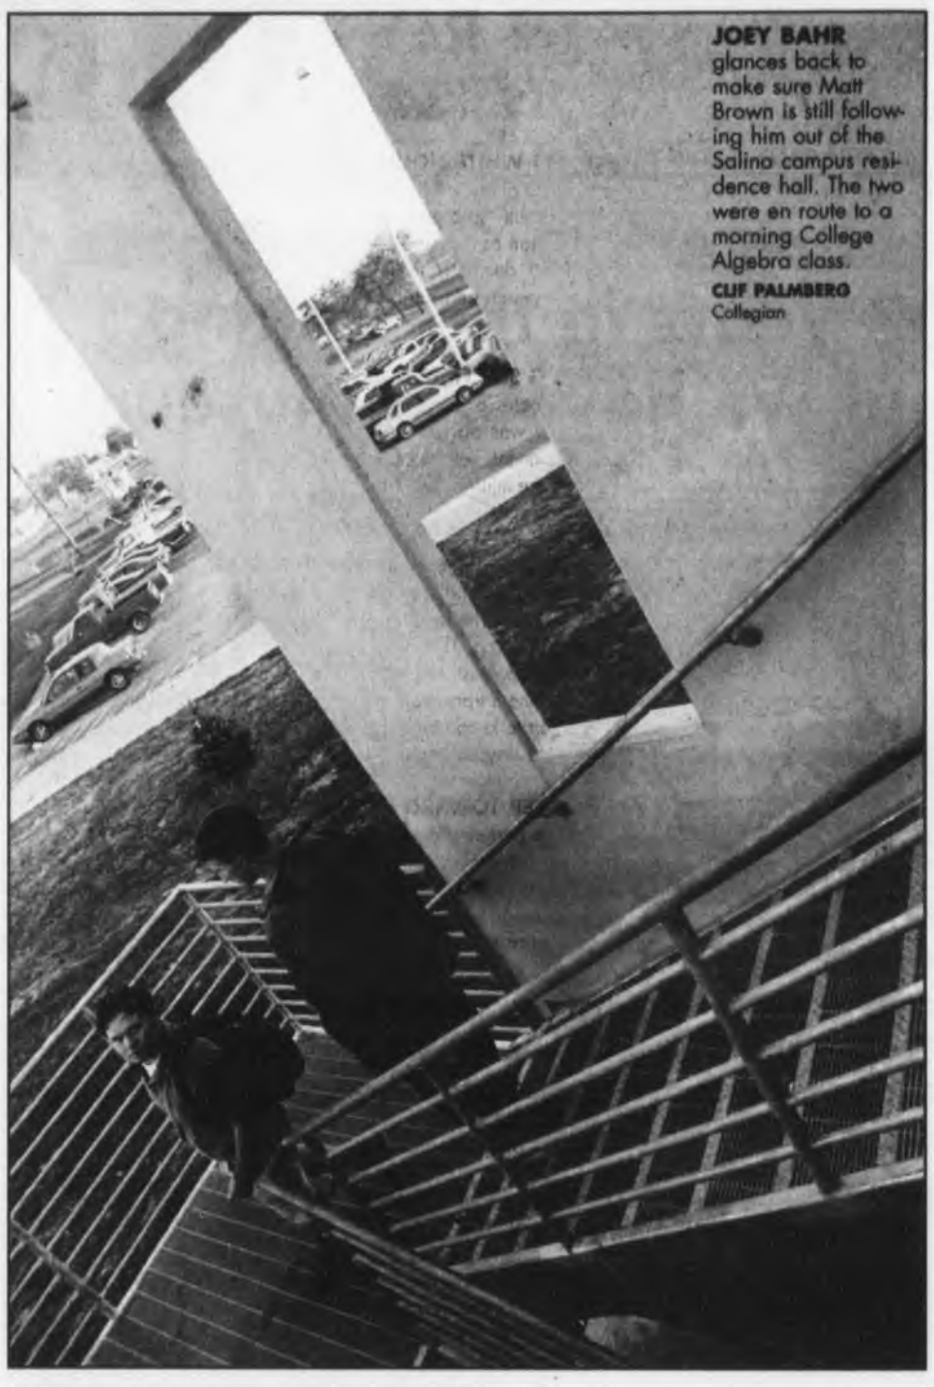
Some students take advantage of the outside classes several times during their academic career.

Paul English, junior in history, has taken three courses through the program and said he believes it has been beneficial to him.

"The classes meet only twice a week, and they are a lot smaller. I think the class load is a little easier because it does not have quite the same feel as regular university classes," English said.

Although classes are at Fort Riley, the atmosphere is not all that different from K-State classes, Stanley said, because regular K-State faculty and graduate teaching assistants instruct the courses.

Schweller said she likes being part of a class with only five other K-State students and five military personnel because it provides a different atmosphere. Unfortunately, Schweller said, there are a few drawbacks.



"I have class for three hours on Monday and Wednesday nights, so I miss Wednesday night chapter at my sorority house. I never feel like I know what's going on now, so I have to depend a lot on the other girls, and sometimes I don't have the gas money," she said.

Parking is not a problem, which is nice, English said, but the distance is one of the drawbacks.

"Classes are far away from Manhattan and they do tend to eat up your nights. Another drawback is if you miss one class, it feels like you missed a week because so much is taught in one class," he said.

Even with the drawbacks, English said, the classes are a convenient opportunity for students to take classes they really need and achieve their academic goals.

"I see quite a few K-State students taking classes at Fort Riley, especially older, non-traditional students. Because a lot of them have a tough time with a regular daytime schedule, it is much easier to take these courses," he said.

JOEY BAHR glances back to make sure Matt Brown is still following him out of the Salina campus residence hall. The two were en route to a morning College Algebra class.

▶ RACE RELATIONS

Racial tensions rise in Garden City

KELLY FURNAS
staff writer

It's the sort of thing one might expect from a large city. It's what people would see in movies and on television. It's heard of in certain areas of the country and after certain court cases.

But racial tensions are breaking out in a small western Kansas high school.

Problems between white and Hispanic students at Garden City High School have resulted in the cancellation of a pep assembly and the mediation of an official from the U.S. Department of Justice.

Two weeks ago, tensions were high enough that the Homecoming pep rally was canceled 15 minutes before it was scheduled to begin.

Rumors were circulating that students would interrupt the assembly with the Pledge of Allegiance, and the involved students would confront those who did not participate.

Instead, students remained in their classrooms and watched the Homecoming crowning on closed-circuit television.

Students also began wearing T-shirts that said "Proud to be American" and "Proud to be Mexican."

There were also rumors students were stealing flags and that a riot was in the brewing.

The problems caused Joe Rodriguez, a mediator with the Justice Department, to step in. Rodriguez, who works out of the four-state office of Community Relations Service, was called in to assess and help quell racial tensions in Garden City.

"I don't want anybody to think we're here to investigate them," he said at a school board meeting Oct. 7. "Everything I do here will be above the board."

The actions he took included calling student-discussion sessions during the week as well as a community meeting for Oct. 13.

"(Students) didn't agree on why they wore shirts or change anybody's mind, but at least it was civil discourse," Rodriguez said at the community meeting.

"They did it in such a way that let them get some things off their chests."

Rodriguez said the school and the district should make contingency plans in case of a racial disturbance, as well as train student mediators to help deal with problems on an individual basis. But Rodriguez urged the audience not to think the problem was over.

"To me, the tension was at a low level," he said. "But that doesn't mean there's not still underlying friction."

Don Barta, principal of Garden City High, also said the past week had been uneventful.

"It's been a real quiet week," he said. "The school itself has been quiet."

Justin Niedens, a senior at Garden City High School, also said the tensions were beginning to mellow.

"It's starting to calm down," he said. "But you can still see it."

Niedens said the initial problems started from a lack of respect.

"Both sides didn't want to show respect," he said. "Both sides were doing things just to spite each other."

Student conduct was a strong topic at the school-board meeting Oct. 8.

"We need strict rules of conduct at the high school and then enforce them," board member Dick Strandmark said.

"I don't think we're doing that right now. I just wonder if we have concrete enough rules."

Strandmark also emphasized the importance of not underplaying the situation.

"You can't lose sight of the fact that, for the first time in Garden City history, we canceled a high-school activity because we were afraid of a riot," he said.

"I think the community is really upset that the high school might not be a safe place for their kids."

But Niedens said racial tensions weren't shocking to him.

"Garden City may not be a big town," he said, "but we have a large diversity of ethnic groups."

DAY

for the second day.

In previous years, prospective students followed a current students, usually student ambassadors, around to their classes.

This year, all the student ambassadors' schedules were put on a sheet that was handed out with a folder of other information about the school. Students could pick which classes they wanted to visit.

"We think students might get more out of seeing different classes in their area of interest," Wagner said. "This way a student doesn't sit through my calculus class unless he wants to, of course."

The purpose of having students sit in on classes was to let them see what a real college course is like. To do this, teachers were just supposed to conduct class as usual, Roger Steinbrock, public relations and admissions coordinator, said.

"Basically we want to show prospective students what classes are really like, so we won't change anything for their benefit," Steinbrock said.

Although the intention of the weekend is to recruit potential students, Steinbrock said most students who attend are already seriously considering K-State-Salina. For this reason, about 90 percent of the students who attend end up going to the school.

"Overall, I think everything went pretty well," Brus said. "Of the students I talked to, a lot of them were really excited about coming here."

OPINION

ONE VOICE ★ ONE VOTE

As part of Collegian policy, we will not run opinions endorsing candidates. Rather, we will run opinions discussing issues. For more information regarding this policy, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu) or at 532-0730.

IN OUR OPINION

67 years in the making; but we have our museum

After years of waiting and hard work, the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art opened Sunday afternoon.

Students have an opportunity to get involved in art with the new museum.

Students and faculty fought for a museum 67 years before it became a reality. After all the money and hard work put into the museum, students should take advantage of the new building on campus.

WHY WE CARE

Until now, the art scene in Manhattan was lacking. The Beach Museum has changed all that. We should all take advantage of this piece of culture.

Although $3 million dollars was donated by Ross and Marianna Kistler Beach, the museum still cost K-State millions of dollars.

Midwestern and local art is a theme of the art collection.

With this local focus, students can experience famous and well-known artists from Kansas and all around the Midwest.

The collections on display include "The Collective Spirit: Selections from the Permanent Collection."

K-State's collection is so large students can visit the Beach Museum every couple months and see new items from the collection.

Upon advance request, items in the collection that aren't on display can be viewed.

Other collections displayed at the museum include "Tom Edwards and the Meditative State." Edwards is a graduate of K-State and a Kansas artist.

Artist Dean Mitchell from Overland Park has a collection on display at the Beach called "Dean Mitchell: An Anthology."

A new club called Beach Bums also offers a chance to get involved in the museum. Beach Bums is a student support and activity group.

Applications are available at the museum. To become a charter member, applications and a $10 fee must be submitted by Nov. 15.

Museum articles and a map of the museum are archived on the E-Collegian. Look in the Beach Museum Archives at (http://collegian.ksu.edu/beach.html).

The Mitchell and Edwards collections will be on display until Jan. 19, and "The Collective Spirit" will show until Feb. 1. Students should take advantage of the opportunity to view Kansas artists in the new Kansas museum.

In Our Opinion, an editorial discussed and chosen by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board. For information on who is an editorial board member or how you can become a member, contact Sera Tank at (karolyi@ksu.edu).

teaching for tomorrow

An education degree means more than making pretty bulletin boards; student teachers face the challenge of fighting mediocrity.

MY

Christy LITTLE

I see students who enter the room overtaken with a desire to know more ... yet I also see so many students who view the classroom as a four-wall prison they must endure for another hour.

Education has a reputation for being one of the easiest majors at K-State.

You make pretty bulletin boards, learn to aim overhead projectors and study seating-chart methods.

At least that's the general conception most of my friends have of my training, an occasional unit plan notwithstanding.

But education majors have a quest, so to speak, so you all disappear for a few months. You return ragged and pale, triumphant or defeated.

Those who come back have successfully student taught for a semester, the dark tunnel through which you travel before you can claim that degree and/or Kansas teaching certificate.

If you make it, congratulations. You are now, as I heard one associate principal put it, a certified zookeeper.

I am student teaching in my home district, Shawnee Mission, in the Kansas City area.

Welcome back to high school.

But regardless of whether it's 11th grade or third grade, school is different.

Now I'm the teacher, the adult, supposedly responsible, trained and all-knowing.

That's why I think you earn 75 percent of your K-State degree while student teaching. (Now if only that could transfer into credit hours.)

For three years, there isn't much anyone can do to make you ready for student teaching.

You learn to plan your time, set a good example, be fair, know your content, understand objectives — but ultimately, your real education comes when you enter the classroom, write "Mr. or Miss XXX" on the board, and face the music, so to speak.

I face my music in the form of journalism and senior English courses. I see a range of ninth- through 12th-grade students every day.

Each class is its own adventure.

My hours are perfectly alternating journalism and English, so I see ninth-grade students who can neither spell nor write in complete sentences in Journalism 1 before facing a roomful of 18-year-olds for senior English.

They know I'm not much older than they are, and most of them are taller, too.

After that I go to newspaper class, where zany story ideas and rubber cement fly through the room, and then I'm back to English to teach "Beowulf" to all the seniors who aren't taking the afternoon off.

Finally, there's yearbook, a 40-member, seventh-hour class. I might add that if you can take roll in a 40-member, seventh-hour class with any law and order whatsoever, you should earn your Kansas teaching certificate, hands down.

But what you see is not necessarily what you get. I wish it were that simple.

I see students whose greatest ordeal is whom to take to the Homecoming dance, and I see others who are clinically depressed.

I've confiscated Magic Markers from a senior who was coloring, then saw one of his classmates arrested for drug possession.

I see (so few, so far between!) students who enter the room overtaken with a desire to know more, students who challenge me and make me talk rather than recite, yet I also see so many students who view the classroom as a four-wall prison they must endure for another hour.

How to meet all those needs is a challenge for which school simply cannot prepare you.

If the College of Education is lacking in any standard, it is that it does not weed out the people who are not flexible, tolerant and creative enough to work with the academic and disciplinary needs of a diverse classroom.

Regardless, it has prepared me the best it could. My experiences have been both varied and insightful.

Perhaps sharing some of them will better serve future student teachers as far as what to expect, and it may enlighten other readers as to what is the real classroom today, rather than the one you graduated from one, five, 10 or more years ago.

Fighting mediocrity, boredom, discipline, personal troubles — for me, it has been an enlightening, if sometimes humbling, experience I am looking forward to sharing for the rest of the semester.

Extreme planning: For those who spend more time yapping than studying

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

For the fourth year, I bought myself a daily planner to kick off the fall semester.

And for the fourth year, it has lain dormant in my backpack, with the corners of pages torn off here and there when I needed something to spit my gum into.

Until last week, that is.

I decided last Monday that I had been farting away far too much of my time. It wasn't the amount of time I was spending yapping with my friends, but the way I stretched out the tasks I undertook during my time alone that alarmed me.

Each plastic dish, when I washed it, was receiving the attention mom's Norman Rockwell plates might merit. My homework, on the other hand, was taking me as much time yet wasn't getting so cleanly finished.

Something clearly had to change.

Before this past week, I'd never understood how some people could be so loyal to their daily planners. This might sound a little bit strange coming from a person who claims to be something of a writer, but I've never been one to write things down.

In class, I don't take the copious notes I see those around me scribbling. When I make an appointment for a haircut, I only make a mental note of it. I journal daily, but the percentage of my daily musings that actually make it onto the page is minuscule.

Hence, I had to force myself to dig out my planner and start committing to paper the meetings, appointments and dates I knew I had coming up. Then I proceeded to allot every spare minute to some specific, worthwhile task.

On Tuesday, for instance, I was to e-mail at 10:20, eat lunch and read the paper at 12:30, practice GRE tests at 3:30, go exercise at 5:00, go to the KSU Orchestra concert at 8:00, then study for my novel test until I crashed and drooled all over Jane Eyre.

For me, writing these things down was disagreeable in the extreme. It seemed I might just as easily remember them all, but for the sake of a week's experiment in managing time, I made myself do it.

Did it work for me? Well, my mind was never cluttered to begin with, so I don't think that writing down my daily life actually helped organize me. Rather, it eased my conscience.

In the past, anything and everything I needed to do had nagged at my conscience. Papers and doctor's appointments just sat there like slobs and bothered me until I finally kicked them out — in other words, until I got them over with.

Writing them down in my planner proved to be a way of kicking them out early. As the week went on, my planner became a confidant. I heard it calling, "Come to me, baby. Tell me what it is you gotta do. Tell me what's bothering you."

I did.

Pretty soon, I had no idea what the hell I was supposed to be doing in two hours or in two days. That was the planner's concern. When I wanted to know, I'd open the thing up and with the same intonation Butt-head might use, say, "Uh ... oh, yeah."

MY

Keely SCHIELDS

There was also the easy feeling that whatever I was doing at any point in time had to be exactly what I should be doing, because it was scheduled that way.

But no, the planner had me going to bed at 11:30 on Thursday, and I was up with a friend until 1:30 or so. Spontaneous as it was, talking with him was the right thing at that time.

Right now, I have this coarse black hair on my chin I want to go tweeze. Sometimes they take a while to get a hold of and yank out. I hadn't planned on it, but I think I'll go do that in a minute.

All in all, I'm glad I conducted my extreme planner-use experiment. I don't. think I'll waste my free time quite so thoroughly for a long time to come, but then, I don't think I'll write anything in my planner either. For some reason, I prefer spontaneity and a burdened memory.

At the same time, maybe I'll stop spitting my gum into the pages.

Why must grass be green?

Editor,

I am writing in reference to two articles that appeared in the Oct. 10 edition of the Collegian concerning the arrival of GHB to Manhattan.

The front-page article titled " 'Roofies' might have surfaced in city" is commendable. Manhattan needs to be educated as to the dangers and effects of this substance if in fact it has come to Manhattan.

However, the editorial titled "Drug forces us to be suspicious at parties" is particularly troubling. The editorial board has turned the numerous rumors and allegations flying around campus into fact before any facts are known.

From high school experience, this is known as libel, something I sincerely hope the Collegian staff is familiar with at this point. The editorial board has taken it upon itself to be judge, jury and executioner to indict the greek system using speculation as its only basis.

It is very disappointing that the Collegian staff has disregarded common journalism practice to add fuel to the fire that is already destroying image of the greek system at K-State and the reputation of this University itself.

I ask the Collegian and the rest of the campus to let actions take their course rather than attempting to get the attention of readers and peers by communicating gossip as truth.

Salad-bowl model is racist; melting pot should be our goal

Editor,

Now that cracker-bashing week has been completed, can people talk about diversity without being called a racist? Lets, face it: Politically correct diversity is not about people understanding the other diverse cultures in our country; it merely is about indoctrinating the white Europeans into accepting other cultures at the expense of their own culture. Sure, be realists: White Europeans have to understand the other cultures of non-European heritage, but is its time that the people of non-European heritage really try to understand the European American culture and the complex cross currents that formed it.

This idea of society being a salad bowl is just plain racist. One does not get true diversity from a salad bowl. While the salad bowl might look diverse, the reality is one has a bowl of segregated vegetables. Even if one was to try to mix the vegetates, one still gets segregation. No blending, no mixing, just segregated vegetables. Furthermore, while this segregation is not forced, per se, it surely is fiercely promoted as the right thing to do. Forcing the idea of diversity upon a society is a more effective form of racism than any right-wing hate group could ever dream up!

Some of the speakers who spoke on diversity wonder why we as a country are becoming less racially tolerant of each other. Have they thought that in their zeal to promote diversity, they are in fact spreading the seeds of racial and ethnic strife and discord? This country, while it had its share of problems with race relations in the past, was moving steadily to erase the artificial barriers that had been erected between the races and various ethnic minorities. Unfortunately, this was stopped when diversity and the salad bowl idea became the buzzwords of the 1980s. This must end if we are to remain as a nation. A nation cannot survive when seeds of disunity are being sown within its own borders. Seeds even sown by the best intentions from the liberals.

There is nothing wring with the melting pot theory of the American culture. In fact, it truly is the only way differing cultures within a society will co-mingle and exchange ideas and customs. Forcing a group of diverse individuals into somewhat of a convergent society is the only way a person's desire to purposely segregate themselves can be overcome. Allowing a country to willfully segregate themselves along racial or ethnic lines will only lead to a balkanization of a society an thus precluding any benefits that a society would gain by the diverseness of the group. Metallurgists do not merely throw the elements of an allow into a kettle and allow the base metals to willfully segregate themselves of stay in clumps of the differing metals. No, they add head to the base various metals melt and blend together, thus forming a new stronger alloy. Our country must be the same. While the country might be a former British colony, when one pauses and examines our society as a while, with various subtleties added in from other non-British nations, one sees that we are in fact, "from many, one."

Senior prepared for future

■ Senior Jason Johnson enjoys life outside of the spotlight.

BRENT STOVER
contributing writer

In basketball and hockey, playing center usually coincides with fame and glory.

In football, the center takes his place in just about everyone else's shadow. That is, of course, until he jumps offsides or makes a bad snap. Then everybody knows who he is.

The truth is, the center is probably the most important position on the field.

He is the only player guaranteed to touch the football every single play.

Senior Jason Johnson is that unheralded player for K-State's football team. As with most offensive linemen, he rarely gets the credit he deserves.

"It's just part of the game," Johnson said. "Being a center, I understand that. I accept that fact. I achieve success through the team."

Johnson, who is from Gladstone, Mo., chose K-State over rival Big 12 schools the KU, Missouri and Iowa State when he was recruited out of high school.

"When I came down here, I really felt a unique closeness amongst the players that I didn't feel anywhere else," he said.

Johnson, now a co-captain for the Wildcats, is in his third year as the starting man in the middle. He began his college career as a tight end.

During spring 1993, after redshirting the fall season, Johnson was moved to center after he caught the attention of his head coach during an offense vs. defense drill.

"I happened to do a fairly good job. Coach Snyder was there. And the next day I got a phone call that Coach wanted to talk to me in his office," Johnson said.

By the time football season rolled around the next fall, Johnson had become the back-up center for senior Quentin Neujahr, who would go on to play in the NFL.

As the heir-apparent at center, Johnson paid attention to Neujahr, listening carefully to his advice.

"He was like my own little personal coach," Johnson said. "The coaches would give me the broad picture and tell me what I needed to do. Quentin just told me some of the finer points."

As a freshman, Johnson played in 10 regular-season games backing up Neujahr. He also saw significant action on special teams.

Johnson became the starter in his sophomore campaign and went the whole season without being whistled for a penalty.

Last year, Johnson was named to the honorable-mention all-Big 8 team by the Big 8 coaches, despite being hampered for most of the season by a wrist injury.

As for the spotlight, Johnson doesn't mind staying out of it. He's comfortable in his role as an offensive lineman.

"It's a team effort and we realize if we don't do our job, the offense doesn't do anything," Johnson said.

"As an offensive line we have a lot to do with the success of the team."

Playing against other great athletes week in and week out, Johnson said he realized it's nearly impossible to win every physical battle throughout the course of the game.

"I may not be as fresh at the end of the game as I am at the beginning of the game, but as long as I'm giving it my all and competing, I feel like I've accomplished something," he said.

Johnson, whose father, Bob Johnson played for the Kansas City Chiefs, said he would like the opportunity to play in the NFL some day, but is prepared for the future no matter where it leads him. As his 3.83 GPA shows, Johnson takes his studies seriously.

"Of course it's always been a dream — a goal of mine, but by the same token I've really taken pride in my education," said Johnson, who has twice been named to the academic all-Big 8 first team.

"I figure the most important thing for me is to concentrate on K-State and what's attached right now, and if there's an opportunity at the end of the season, great. And if there isn't, that's fine also."

JILL JARSULIC/Collegian

K-STATE CENTER Jason Johnson helps stop a Nebraska defender during the Wildcats' 35-3 loss to the Cornhuskers at KSU Stadium. Johnson, a senior, chose K-State over KU, Missouri and Iowa State because of the closeness he felt among the players.

Want to play basketball? Try out today

K-State's men's basketball team will be having walk-on tryouts today.

Students interested should report to the gymnasium at Ahearn Field House at 5:15 p.m., ready to play. Tryouts will begin promptly at 5:30.

Assistant Coach Bob Hanson can answer questions at 532-6531.

Championship reminiscent of 'Hoosiers'

My team, Goodnow 4, rocked the house, winning the residence halls' men's flag football championship. Amazingly, our team turned around and won the all-University championship.

The all-U championship marked one of the first times a fraternity or independent team didn't win the championship since K-State intermurals began in 1922.

Of course, records don't go back that far to say for sure a residence hall has never won a championship. But it's been a long time, at least, since the feat has been accomplished.

John BERGGREN

"I haven't heard of it happening," Steve Martini, intramural associate director, said. "In my last 16 years and as best as I can remember, it has never been done."

Never been done? If so, that's awesome.

I have to hand it to BeLow Me, the team Goodnow 4 beat. It had to be a little fatigued when it came game time for the all-U championship. BeLow Me played three games Sunday, winning the independent league championship and then turning around and winning the first round of the all-U championship.

Goodnow 4 beat Goodnow 1 in the residence-hall championship and received a bye in the first round of the all-U tournament, automatically putting us in the championship game.

The team who gets the bye first round is rotated every year between the champions of the residence halls, independents and fraternity leagues.

The win for G4, as we refer to ourselves, is amazing to me for a couple of reasons.

First, at the beginning of the season and even up until the final game, there was a feeling residence halls didn't even belong anywhere close to the title of all-University champions.

Residence halls, from my point of view, were looked upon as groups of people who just played football to get out of the supposedly lame residence-hall life.

The championship was almost like one of those stories of teams that are in those feel-good movies like the "Bad News Bears" or "Hoosiers." They were teams who weren't expected to accomplish anything.

With one exception, our staff assistant quarterback, Marlone "Juke and Jive" Davis, our whole team was made up of people who just played their hearts out, jelled together as a team and accomplished the unthinkable — winning the all-University Championship.

I guess it shows it doesn't only happen in the movies. When a group of people sets out to accomplish one goal, it can be attainable. That is one of the beauties of teamwork.

There are many noted cases of people banding together for one purpose — the founding of this country, for example — and accomplishing what they set out to do.

Our team was able to keep things in perspective all season. We practiced once a week and went undefeated throughout the regular season, but we didn't stop there.

If we had lost a game, we would have been upset, but it wouldn't have been something we would have gone home and kicked the dog about.

A lot of people, when they set out to do something, go out and forget the real reason they're doing it. We played football for fun.

We weren't like the teams I've heard rumors of who had two-a-days the week the season began. We got involved to have fun.

Maybe if more people who set out to accomplish something could stay focused, doing things for the right reasons, this old world of ours wouldn't be such a bad place.

K-State soccer club remains only Big 12 non-varsity team

■ Season starting off on right foot for Wildcat women.

DAVE GUNTHER
contributing writer

The K-State Women's Soccer Club is off and rolling this semester with a record of 1-0-1.

With one win over Wichita State and a tie against Kansas, members of the club said they are hoping they will soon become a varsity sport. For now, they have to stretch out the $1,349.00 per year allotment they receive from K-State, plus the $30.00 dues the players pay.

Mary Battle, club president, said the club is the only one of its kind in the Big 12.

"(K-State) is the only school in the Big 12 without a varsity women's soccer team," Battle, a sophomore in biochemistry, said. "It's kind of embarrassing when you read the Kansas City Star, and they say that there are only going to be 11 schools at the Big 12 Championships because one of the schools doesn't have a team. Then they go on and list the teams that will be there."

MORE INFO

▶ If you're interested in joining K-State's women's soccer club, more information can be obtained by calling Mary Battle at 539-7051.

Getting players for the team is not a problem, with more than 30 women on the roster at the beginning of the season. Battle said 20-25 regulars show up for every practice.

"We practice at Memorial Stadium three times a week, Tuesdays, Thursdays and Sundays, from 5:30 p.m. until whenever we decide to leave," she said.

The club's next games will be on the weekend of Oct. 26-27 at Colorado and Colorado State.

The next home game is against Kansas Nov. 3, at Frank Anneberg Park. The game starts at 5:30 p.m.

If the club does well enough this season, it might have a chance to attend the National Intermural Recreation Sports Association tournament Nov. 20-23 at the University of Texas in Austin.

Among teams that call NIRSA with their results each week, the top 16 will be invited to attend the national championships. Battle said K-State has been reporting its results.

"That would be great if we were able to attend the tournament. It would be a great boost in helping us become a varsity sport," Battle said.

KU determined to win, even without Vaughn

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE— The black cast on Jacque Vaughn's wrist Monday isn't wrecking any of the confidence of a Kansas team that returned every key player from last year's team, which just missed the Final Four.

Vaughn, who broke his wrist in a pickup game, is out for an estimated 12 weeks, depriving a Kansas team, which starts practice today, of its superb playmaker and defensive specialist.

Sophomore Ryan Robertson will take over at the point for a Jayhawks team that many preseason prognosticators were picking No. 1 before Vaughn's injury.

"We have a tremendously difficult schedule, made even more difficult by the fact that Jacque is hurt," Coach Roy Williams said at the Jayhawk media day.

"I think it will make the other guys more determined."

Kansas will field a big frontline with senior center Scot Pollard, Raef LaFrentz and Paul Pierce. Jerod Haase, who suffered through a season-long shooting slump last year that eventually helped knock the Jayhawks out of a trip to the Final Four in a loss to Syracuse, will team up with Robertson in the backcourt.

"It's important for him to shoot it better than he did last year," Williams said of Haase.

"But he does so many other things to help us when he's not shooting it in. But he's going to have to shoot it in better than last year.

"You don't replace Jacque Vaughn. You try to hide the weaknesses and promote the other areas where you are strong. It doesn't say Jacque Vaughn on the jersey. It says Kansas on the jersey. This is a team."

Vaughn, injured when he was knocked down by teammate Billy Thomas, is expected to begin weight work and conditioning soon. It likely will be after the first of the year before he can play.

"It's just another obstacle, another challenge I have to get through," said Vaughn, an honor student who decided not to enter the NBA draft this spring and finish his college career.

"It's a challenge to the ball club. They will all have to get better," said Vaughn, who at one point seemed more concerned that the injury caused him to miss two weeks of school. "I've always said I'm a student of the game, and this will give me a chance to see it from the bench. It will give me a chance to be more analytical. This could be a blessing in disguise."

Dear Cassie

by Cassandra Duveaux

'Lot Lizards': take a hike

Dear Cassandra,

I was going to class one day last week when the weather was fair, it wasn't raining and the temperature was moderate. Because I live way off campus, I have to drive to class, get to campus a bit early and walk to class.

I usually park behind Weber and walk to Ackert, since most of my classes are there. I do zip through the Bob Dole Hall and Call Hall parking lots to see if there is a place open, but usually I park in that huge lot behind Weber.

As I go to class, walking of course, I see some despised drivers — the Lot Lizards. These are the people who get to campus at 8:45 for a 9:30 class and sit in the parking lot right beside their class until they can get a spot, be it 10 minutes or 2 hours later. They sit and wait and leap into a spot 2 feet from the door of their building because, heaven forbid, they would have to WALK anywhere! (Of course, people with disabilities or injuries preventing walking easily are excluded from this.)

Who wouldn't benefit from a little walking? And don't say, "My back pack is too heavy," or "I don't have on the right shoes to walk in." Many of us carry great weights on our shoulders literally and figuratively and can walk just fine, thank you. I typically have about 30 pounds strapped to my back everyday. And why are you on campus in shoes you can't walk in? If you have to wear non-walking shoes in class, bring walking shoes to hoof it around campus.

Quit being so lazy! Lesson for the day — stop waiting in the parking lots closest to your class and park somewhere you don't have to wait for a spot (i.e. Weber), get off your duff and WALK for heaven's sake! You need the exercise anyway!

Sincerely,

Head Hunter of Lot Lizards

Dear Head Hunter

I often wondered the same thing until I experienced a revelation watching the movie "Sneakers" (which, by the way, featured one of Dan Akroyd's best performances). The world operates not on reality, but on the perception of reality.

There is no shortage of parking at K-State. There is no shortage of parking close to classroom buildings. Almost anyone can find a parking spot behind Weber or across from Memorial Stadium any time of day every day of the week, and it would take less than 10 minutes.

But people still wait hours spots to open up in the K-State Student Union or Durland Hall lots. People pay through the nose to park in the meters all day.

New lots are impossible. There's nowhere to put them. A shuttle from Bramlage Coliseum is not likely to be used.

And because any parking garage almost has to be built on top of one of the outlying lots, those people who don't want to walk now probably won't walk then.

I applaud you for walking, but don't expect the world to be as enlightened as you are.

Try to keep the head hunting to a minimum.

Cassandra

'Tool' keeps style through attitudes

RHETT HARTMAN

With the recent release of its third CD, "Aenima," Tool keeps to its old style through an unconventional attitude and refreshing rhythms and sounds.

Some of these songs have the flavor of old Tool, with unique syncopation and a spooky vocal reverb effect. But there is much to this CD that stands on its own.

The CD cover is phenomenal, as far as CD covers go.

Hold the CD in your hand, and as you move it, the picture on the front moves. This is something you have to see to believe, which lends itself to the attitude of the entire CD.

Next is the absence of a lyric sheet. This makes it difficult to initially hear the lyrics, but when you do hear the spooky words, the impression is much more powerful.

The songs on this CD are not to be taken lightly. Tool is not a band that can be immediately understood. Some of the songs are confusing, especially "Message from Harry Manback," which seems to be nothing but a delicate piano part and seagulls. While this sits in the background, a scratchy voice talks over the phone about how much hate he has for America. Parts of this song are in Italian.

The song "Die Eier von Satan" cannot escape mention. For the non-German speakers, it translates to "The eggs (or balls) of Satan." The entire song is a very industrialist song with monologues by two German-speaking men.

It seemed to be translated straight from an English version, and the two speakers had very American accents.

The song is not satanic or Nazi propaganda, either. It's actually a recipe for cookies called die Eier von Satan.

The song is full of duplicit meanings. The more you understand about it (its cultural and literal context), the stranger it becomes.

The song "H." is reminiscent of a traditional Tool song.

A syncopated beat keeps the listener always off-balance but with a feeling of rhythm.

The song is refreshing in its variation of sounds, with many different combinations of percussion sounds and rhythms.

It is easy to fall into this song's unending rhythm, even when it reaches its extremes of sound and excitement.

Still, there is a consistent circulation of emotion that ties itself always to your ears. This song is easy to get used to.

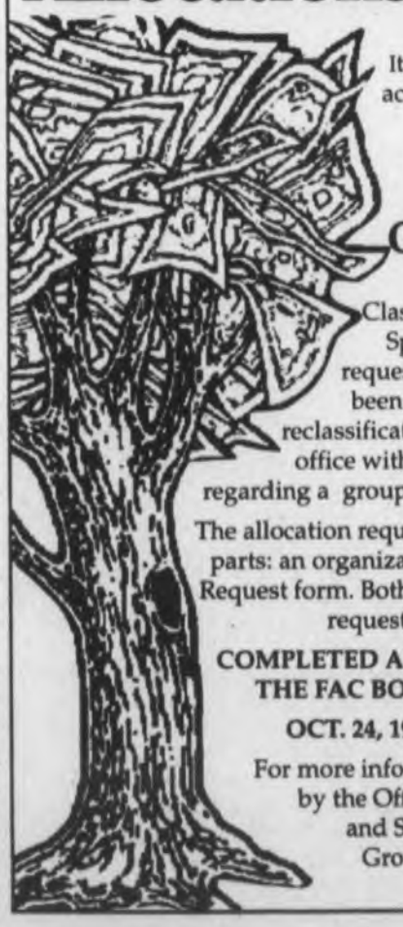
Other songs follow this pattern. "Jimmy" has a much heavier beat, with sharper and deeper sounding percussion instead of the lighter and higher-pitched variety in "H."

The ravenous lead guitar eats up the background and provides a foundation for the band to lash out.

Tool musically expresses its lighter side in "Pushit."

This song is structured more with a melody instead of a bassy beat or a rhythmic syncopation. That's not to say this song doesn't use these ideas, but that, especially in the end, Tool doesn't depend so much on these tools to provide music.

Perhaps this is the direction in which Tool is moving. This is Tqol's third album, and its is good at what it does, but its talent will stagnate without change.



This album represents a movement toward a more defined and clear Tool. Tool will never be predictable, but it will get better. This album is a step in the right direction.

This is a very good website for Tool. It has the lyrics that aren't included in the CD.

Columbus Day delivers Dow

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — After ebbing at the 6,000-mark for a week, the Dow Jones industrial average floated into uncharted waters Columbus Day by closing above 6,000 for the first time on Monday.

The famed barometer of big U.S. companies rose 40.62 to 6,010.00, shooting past the milestone early in the session and, unlike last week's fleeting attempts, held its ground for the rest of the session, benefiting from a holiday session that proved dependably uneventful.

The move past the 6,000-mark comes less than a year after the Dow's first close above 5,000 and less than 20 months after the first finish above 4,000.

Adding to the symbolism, the milestone also came just days after what many consider the sixth anniversary of the bull market, a lucrative run that seemed all but dead just a few months ago, when jitters about the economy and corporate profits sent the Dow tumbling below 5,200.

The Standard & Poor's 500 list and the Nasdaq composite index also moved back into record territory Monday, padding Friday's rebound from several days of profit-taking on the market's rapid ascent.

But most analysts said Monday's advance came on the type of light holiday volume that can easily exaggerate the moves of a few stocks, particularly in a small index such as the Dow.

Texaco, for example, accounted nearly 11 points of the Dow's gain without the benefit of any big developments for the oil company.

The number of stocks showing a gain on the session outnumbered those with a loss by a narrow margin on most markets.

"This was not a thing of beauty today. You've got 6,000, but the rest of the market has acted tired," said Alfred E. Goldman, vice president of A.G. Edwards & Sons in St. Louis.

There was none of the usual guidance for stocks from the bond market, which was closed in observance of Columbus Day.

The federal holiday also meant no new economic data from the government.

Without the usual array of influences, there were few obstacles to a follow-through on Friday's rally, which was spurred by the latest indications of steady economic growth with stable inflation.

Analysts cautioned that the advance leaves the market vulnerable if the coming barrage of earnings reports and Wednesday's data on the direction of consumer prices during September don't meet expectations.

But starting the week on a positive note, Chrysler reported it nearly doubled its third-quarter profits, soundly beating forecasts.

The strong showing bolstered hopes for Ford and General Motors, which report later in the week.

"Chrysler's news was good news in general for the state of the economy," said Goldman. "Where is this dead consumer the bears have been telling us about? The economy is still together and that's why we're still in a bull market."

In one of the most heavily anticipated reports from the computer-related sector, Intel announced after the close of trading that record sales helped the world's leading chipmaker to a 41-percent gain in third-quarter profits, surpassing analysts' most optimistic expectations.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by a slim 12-to-11 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 322 million shares as of 4 p.m., down from 395.93 million in Friday's session.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock index rose 2.88 to 703.54, edging last Monday's record finish at 703.34. The NYSE's composite index rose 1.34 to 374.23, about half a point shy of a new high.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 8.09 to 1,256.36, beating last Monday's record close at 1,250.87. The American Stock Exchange's market-value index fell 1.08 to 579.33.

Chrysler's shares rose 1 to 32-3/4 in active NYSE trading, while Ford rose 7/8 at 32-7/8, and GM rose 1-3/4 at 51-7/8 as one of the Dow's strongest components.

Intel, a dominant force in the Nasdaq market's return to record heights, jumped from 2-1/4 to 107-5/8 in advance of its earnings reports.

Overseas, Tokyo's Nikkei stock average rose 0.3 percent, Frankfurt's DAX index rose 0.3 percent, and London's FT-SE 100 rose 0.3 percent.

Mellencamp releases musical circus, strays from his old, high-flying style

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

In his latest release, titled "Mr. Happy Go Lucky," John Mellencamp strays from the style of music that has made him so popular over the last two decades.

Maybe he shouldn't have ventured into unknown territory.

"Lucky" lacks the thing that made Mellencamp so good in the 1980s — the outlaw, bad-as-I-wanna-be type of attitude. This 12-song effort features only two songs from that blueprint.

Mellencamp staples like the violin are present on this album, but it also features such instruments as the dobro, mellotron, mandolin, chamberlain, loops and slide guitar along with common pieces such as the organ, bass, harmonica and percussion. Heck, they even use a tuba.

Mellencamp had a hand in writing 10 of the 12 cuts, but often resorted to long interludes of people chattering or violins screeching. Without those, the song would probably last about 90 seconds.

The jacket design is that of a circus, and that's exactly what the album itself represents. Chaos. After a while, the songs blend together, and the only thing that tells you it's a new song is the pause between tracks. Other than that, it's some accordion blaring or Mellencamp mumbling about some crisis or another.

But when or if Mellencamp and his verteran band hits the road, they will rake in the cash by singing the oldies.

Mellencamp isn't an idiot. His thinking on releasing this album is clear.

Release an album and put out a video of the best song on it with the hope it will steer people to purchase the compact disc. That gives Mellencamp an excuse to tour once again throughout North America with his band.

And that means money. Look at the Rolling Stones in 1993. The Stones' "Voodoo Lounge" sold only 200,000 copies, but they garnered about a zillion dollars touring the world for a year.

The fifth track, "This May Not Be the End of the World," might be true of Mellencamp's career if he continues to sing his greatest hits, but aside from two songs, this was a pathetic effort.

Some advice for Mellencamp: Go back to what got you here.

Student seeks position with board

CHAD HELIN
staff reporter

A student who was elected to the Board of Student Publications and then fired for campaign violations is applying for the job again.

In an effort to fill the vacant board position, members decided at the meeting Monday to send Mark Tomb another application.

Tomb had already applied for the position this semester, but instead of filling out the provided application, Tomb sent the board a letter.

Patrick Carney, board chairman, said the letter was disrespectful and didn't meet the requirements of the application.

"I was not happy with his response," Carney, senior in political science, said. "It shows a complete unwillingness on his part to work within the established framework."

Board member Russell Fortmeyer, senior in architectural engineering, said Tomb's past experience as both a Privilege Fee Committee member and chair would benefit the board in its dealings with the Student Government Association.

In his letter, Tomb also expressed his displeasure with the SGA's decision to prevent him from serving on the board.

"This bastardization of the electoral process was done by elitists at the Student Governing Association," Tomb, senior in political science, said in his letter to the board.

The letter also included references to mistakes made by the board.

"He insulted me, he insulted SGA, and he insulted previous boards," Carney said.

Clearing up rumors Collegian columnist Lach Franquemont was fired for a column he wrote, Kevin Klassen, editor in chief, said although Franquemont clearly violated Collegian policy, he was fired for too many misspellings and missed deadlines.

The Collegian's rule is to give three warnings and then ask the writer to leave.

Franquemont wrote a column criticizing Sam Brownback that never ran because it broke the Collegian's policy against political endorsements on the opinion page, Klassen, senior in print journalism, said.

Klassen said the newspaper's policy, under which Franquemont was fired, was established and agreed upon at the beginning of the semester by the editors.

In a financial report, Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications Inc., said Student Publications made $930 more than last year despite a rise in newsprint costs, travel and salaries.

He attributed the increase to display and classified advertising, yearbook sales and phonebook sales.

Washington, D.C.," Watts said.

Beth Ann Marten, Manhattan resident, said she could relate.

"We are small-business owners and believe government has grown too large and has taken charge of too many parts of our lives," Marten said.

"We would like to see more support for small businesses and to see the economy grow again from the roots up," he said.

Watts also said many of the cuts in spending were not cuts at all.

He said $12 billion more was put into student loans, $200 million more was put into school-lunch programs, $724 billion more was put into Medicare and $324 billion more was put into Medicaid.

Watts said President Clinton proposed a plan to cut the growth of Medicare by 7.2 percent and called it slowing the growth of Medicare. When Congress cut Medicare by 7.1 percent, it was called gutting Medicare, he said.

Watts said congressional welfare reform mandated participation in job training, education and job programs.

"We got called Nazis for that," he said.

He presented four ways to slow the growth of poverty: keeping families together, promoting the value of work, making the rewards greater for those who work and strengthening the link between effort and reward.

"I loved it," Rhonda Mullin, Manhattan resident, said of Watts' speech. "I would hope that more Christian men would be part of the government."

on where QPA is taking the control. Hill said the program takes even more control away from the local government, whereas Lynch said she believes QPA has put more control into its hands.

However, both candidates said QPA is a beneficial program.

The program essentially tests students to ensure they are actually learning what they are being taught. Although they said there are still problems in the program, both candidates said they think this is because the program is in its early stages.

Improvements that have come to the whole country have happened when issues have been recognized on a national level, she said.

Hill said that in the 20 years the department has been in place, he has not seen tremendous strides made in that time. He said ACT and SAT scores are lower and dropout rates are higher than they were 20 years ago.

"It's hard for me to justify and say that the Department of Education is the solution to all of our problems," he said.

However, Lynch later corrected Hill on his facts about the declining test scores and rising dropout rate.

"The SAT scores are not lower, the dropout rates, proportionately to the number of people, is not higher," she said.

regents system.

Its proposed name is Labette Community College, an affiliate of Pittsburg State University.

- The LCCC Board of Trustees would be dissolved and the deed to the college, with an estimated value of $10 million, given to the regents.

LCC would be managed by a chief operating officer hired by the president of PSU.

- LCCC's local property tax levy would be reduced from the current 25 mills to 12 in the next two years, then gradually be reduced to 6 mills within five years — revenue to be used for capital improvements.
- LCC's operating budget would be increased to $9.3 million annually from the present $6.7 million, with the state's contribution rising to $6.66 million from the current $2.14 million — a rise of $4.52 million.

Out-district tuition would be eliminated, and student tuition would remain at the present level.

K-State wins blood drive, collects more than 700 units

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

K-State won the American Red Cross blood drive trophy last week by collecting 726 units of blood last week.

K-State beat the University of Kansas for the third semester in a row. KU collected 613 units of blood during its drive. The goal for the week at K-State was 900 units.

"We knew 900 units was an ambitious goal, and we didn't make that, but we are always pleased to beat KU," Nancy Powell, Red Cross representative, said.

Powell was pleased with student efforts to give blood.

"The students and volunteer help was excellent. K-State has a real commitment to helping others," Powell said.

Something new this year was free cholesterol screening for all American Red Cross blood donations. The test is designed to provide donors with helpful information for monitoring their health. The results of the total cholesterol number are mailed to the donor about four weeks after the blood drive. An elevated cholesterol number does not defer a donor from making future blood donations.

The units collected will be used by the Central Plains Region of the American Red Cross to supply blood to more than 110 hospitals in Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

Admission standards to rise

Qualified admissions is not the only hot topic in education. Fort Hays State University is looking to guarantee four-year degree programs and K-State responds.

TOPEKA — Eighth-graders in Kansas schools get the word this week on what will be required of them to qualify for admission to the state's six universities when they enter as freshmen in the fall of 2001.

And it became clear on Monday that they will have little room for error.

Stephen Jordan, executive director of the Kansas Board of Regents, outlined for the Legislative Educational Planning Committee the required course of study that a regents task force recommended to the board.

The board will vote on accepting the recommendations at a meeting Thursday in Wichita.

The standards drew a generally favorable response from LEPC members.

"I think they've done a good job," said Rep. Cindy Empson, R-Independence, chairwoman of the committee. "They have developed a curriculum that the (school) districts appear to be able to live with."

But Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, vice chairwoman, expressed concern that students and parents may not realize how absolute the requirements are and that they must plunge into their studies in the ninth grade.

"I'm just afraid for the kids and parents who don't tune in soon enough," Oleen said. "There's no room for error, and it kicks in next fall."

"Generally, people think we have captured the essence of the legislation," Jordan said.

He said some people questioned whether a unit of foreign language should have been included in the core curriculum but added, "I suppose if we had it in there, we would get comment that it shouldn't be in there."

The 14-member task force, which made its final decisions on what to recommend on Oct. 1, was created in May after the 1996 Legislature passed a law requiring establishment of admission standards that would apply to all six universities — in Lawrence, Manhattan, Wichita, Emporia, Hays and Pittsburg.

Kansas is one of the last states to require its high school graduates to pass a core curriculum and achieve a certain grade average to be admitted to its universities.

Major recommendation is that Kansas students achieve at least a 2.0 grade point average on a four-point scale, in a 14-unit precollege curriculum in the ninth through 12 grades.

The core curriculum consists of:

- Four units of English or language arts, which means taking one full-year course each year starting in the ninth grade.
- Three units of natural science chosen from among biology, chemistry, earth-space science and physics. At least one unit must be in chemistry or physics.
- Three units of mathematics with two years of algebra and one of geometry required, except applied math I and II can be substituted for algebra I.
- Three units of social sciences, including one of U.S. history, half a unit of U.S. government, half a unit from among world history, world geography

Students compete on electronic gridiron for chance to go to nationals

R.J. DIEPENBROCK

As the final seconds ticked away on the game clock, sighs of relief and exhaustion escaped the lips of Bill McKibbin, sophomore in biology, and teammate Marshall Anderson, sophomore undecided.

As the No. 1 seed in the 16-team video-game tournament, McKibbin and Anderson won the local Campus Cup Fall '96 Tournament, sponsored by AE Sports Tuesday evening. They were among those hoping for a spot in the national competitions in New Orleans during the Sugar Bowl.

McKibbin and Anderson defeated the team of Todd Stewart, junior in print journalism, and Eric Steinheider, sophomore in accounting, to win the tournament 50-43. They played Sega Genesis College Football USA '97. The tournament took place in the K-State Student Union.

"It's time to celebrate," Anderson said.

Anderson said he thought the event was exciting, although it showed he played too much Sega.

He also said he had been playing football video games for a couple of years to prepare for the yearly tournament.

McKibbin said it felt great to win.

For winning the tournament, McKibbin and Anderson both received plaques and a free video game of their choice.

McKibbin and Anderson are now added to a pool of other teams from other college campuses. The top four teams will go to New Orleans to compete in the national tournament in January.

The teams are chosen by point-differential, Bob Welsh, manager of the AE Sports representatives, said.

The four teams with the highest margin of victory will continue on to nationals, Welsh said.

"Last week, we had a team from Nebraska

Cameras on after move causes delays

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

Most of the campus security cameras that were not working are up and running again.

Robert Mellgren, assistant director of K-State Police, said the cameras were working by last Friday.

Fred Damkroger, director of telecommunications, said the cameras were not working because of campus police's move from East Stadium to Edwards Hall.

"It was a very complex move," Damkroger said.

Don Barrett, installation services supervisor for telecommunications, described the move as a large undertaking.

Barrett sait that several of the cameras required special wiring and specialists had to be called to fix them.

The move required K-State telecommunications to completely rework the fiber-optic cable system, so the cameras and computers would work in Edwards.

The cables had to be routed from the location of the camera via steam tunnels to the power plant, to the Veterinary Medicine Complex, under Denison Avenue to Edwards.

WIBW has Cats into next century

DAN LEWERENZ
assistant campus editor

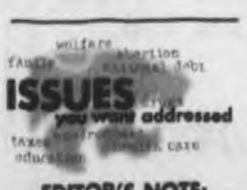
WIBW-AM 580, the flagship station of the Wildcat Sports Network since 1980, has won a bidding war to retain the rights to K-State radio broadcasts into the 21st century.

The deal, worth $1.5 million over five years, gives the network the rights to Wildcat football and men's and women's basketball and baseball. K-State's previous contract paid $110,000 a year for five years.

"During our conversations with several potential rights holders, it became obvious that WIBW and the Wildcat Sports Network was absolutely the correct choice for Kansas State University," Max Urick, K-State athletic director, said.

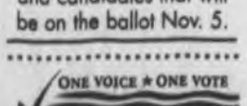
"This agreement ensures a relationship and partnership between WIBW and Kansas State into the next century, and is a significant financial boost to the K-State athletic department."

Among the other suitors was Pinnacle Broadcasting of Omaha, Neb., which won a bidding war last year for the rights to Nebraska football.



"They wanted a five-year deal for an average fee of $332,000 per year," said Ben Boyle, director of radio and television communications for the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"But one of the important things to us was that we kept the WIBW signal, which is one of the strongest signals in the Midwest.



"You can get it throughout the state, in Oklahoma and parts of Texas. We've even had some people in New Mexico who say they can get it."

Law center requires public approval

This is the first part of a series of articles analyzing the issues and candidates that will be on the ballot Nov. 5.

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

A new law-enforcement center, which will include a new county jail, will be on the Nov. 5 ballot.

Building a law-enforcement unit and jail for Riley County has been in the planning stages since 1988.

The proposed law-enforcement center would unify the patrol and records department, the county jail and the investigations department.

It would also be able to hold women and juveniles, and would have a capacity of 75 inmates.

The project would cost $10.8 million, and would be financed by a half-cent sales tax that will begin Jan. 1, 1999, when the existing half-cent sales tax for economic development stops.

County Commissioner Karen McCulloh said the new center would include meeting rooms for groups such as Alcoholics Anonymous and Narcotics Anonymous.

McCulloh said renovations on the current jail are overdue. The building needs plumbing, heating and electrical renovations.

Capt. Nick Edvy, jail administrator at the Riley County Jail, said the current separation of the patrol and records division, the investigations department, and the jail is inefficient.

"The three departments work very intricately," Edvy said. "We must work in unison. There are many we let go, because the information is not readily available."

Riley County pays rent for jail space it uses in Geary County. Rent for female inmates costs Riley County an average of $4,000 a month. Rent for juveniles costs the county $150 a day, per inmate, the Riley County Police Department.

Edvy also said the current jail is not in compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act, which requires buildings to be wheelchair-accessible. Inmates who require wheelchairs also have to be sent to other facilities.

The main drawbacks to the new center were funding and location, the county commission candidates said.

Bob Newsome, a Republican running against McCulloh in the upcoming election, said he thought the County Commission was rushing the proposal.

Newsome has since withdrawn his opposing stance and said he is neutral.

"They need some type of jail improvements," Newsome said. "I don't want to be responsible for it to be defeated if it is defeated. I think it is time for the public to either vote up or down."

The county commission had trouble finding the ideal location for the law-enforcement center. Last January the commission had 18 sites to review for its

The Manhattan City Commission unanimously approved the allocation of funds to help the Farrar Corporation build a new iron-casting plant in Manhattan.

Farrar will receive a $1.6-million loan from the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund to help build the plant.

The project was already unanimously approved by the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board at its Oct. 2 meeting.

"The approval of the commission is a major first step in our project," said Joe Farrar, president of Farrar Corporation.

Farrar said the economic-development system that Manhattan has separated Manhattan from any other cities the company looked at as possible plant sites.

The plant will create an estimated 280 jobs for the Manhattan area in the future. Construction on the plant is to start next summer, with production starting in 1999.

The board also approved the first reading of an ordinance that would create a 10-year property-tax exemption for the new plant.

Under the ordinance, the Farrar Corporation would be excluded from any real and personal property taxes for 10 years. The second reading of the ordinance will be voted on by the commission when the Farrar Corporation decides the financing method of the new plant.

The commission also voted to endorse the upcoming bond issue on the Nov. 5 ballot for the new Riley County law-enforcement center.

The Kremlin denied the report. Yeltsin, 65, is staying at a government rest home outside Moscow while preparing for surgery. He initially said the operation would take place in September, but doctors decided to wait.

• QUAKE HITS NORTHERN ITALY. A moderate earthquake shook northern Italy from the Mediterranean to the Alps on Tuesday, damaging buildings, driving people from their homes and causing dozens of minor injuries. The magnitude-4.8 quake was centered 90 miles south of Milan, and shook buildings in Milan's downtown business district. Regional authorities said about 100 people were treated for minor injuries over a wide area. Four were hospitalized with fractures.

• GM WORKERS AFFECTED BY CANADA STRIKE. General Motors Corp. partially shut down six more parts plants in Mexico on Tuesday because of the effects of the two-week strike against its Canadian subsidiary. No additional U.S. plant slowdowns or closures were announced, but more are expected. GM had already laid off workers at plants in Michigan, Ohio and New York state.

• DEADLY EBOLA VIRUS STRIKES GABON. The death toll from an outbreak of Ebola in Gabon has risen to 10, and at least four more people have been infected with the deadly virus. This is the fourth time the virus has struck the African continent since it appeared in Zaire in the spring of 1995, killing 245 people. It is the second time it has hit in the West African nation of Gabon.

• HOMOSEXUAL FATHER RETAINS CUSTODY. A father can keep custody of his two sons even though he lives with a homosexual lover, the North Carolina Court of Appeals ruled today. The unanimous appeals-court ruling overturns a lower court decision that said the children were exposed to unfit and improper influences that could damage them emotionally and socially. There was no immediate word on whether the mother, Carol Pulliam, would appeal to the state Supreme Court. She had sought to change a custody order filed in California after she and Frederick J. Smith divorced in 1991.

• LAWMAKER WINS LIBEL SUIT AGAINST TV STATION. A Texas lawmaker won a $5.5-million libel verdict against a TV station for a 1991 broadcast that he said cost him Houston's mayoral election. In a 10-2 verdict for Rep. Sylvester Turner, a jury decided Monday that KTRK and reporter Wayne Dolcefino libeled him by linking him to an insurance scam involving a faked death. The jury ruled KTRK should pay Turner just over $5 million and Dolcefino should pay $500,000.

Dedication to students results in national award

Physics isn't a course most students would consider interesting.

"I've spent the last 25 years here trying to teach physics and make it interesting to students," Dean Zollman, professor of physics, said. "That kind of work has paid off."

Zollman's work has definitely paid off for him. He has been named 1996 Professor of the Year by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Zollman is the first professor from Kansas to win this award.

"It certainly would have been nice to have others before me (to win from Kansas), but since there haven't been, it certainly feels good," he said.

Zollman was honored at a reception in Washington, D.C., at the USA TODAY Gannett Publishing Co. building Oct. 10. He was picked out of 204 professors from universities across the nation.

Although Zollman won the award, he said he still does not think he is much different from other professors on campus.

"I don't think I do things that a lot of others don't. What I do is try to listen carefully to the students and then develop new ways of teaching based on what I hear from the students," Zollman said. "Lots of other people do similar things. Maybe I just do more of it, or I work differently than others."

He said he could see attitude changes in the class, Concepts of Physics, that he used to teach.

"I could really see a big change of attitudes towards physics, the ability to learn it, and the students feeling they can learn it better," Zollman said.

Changing his teaching habits is not in Zollman's plans for the immediate future.

"I'm going to keep doing my job," he said. "I'm going to try to maximize whatever we can out of this. This is something that shows that there is quality teaching at K-State. You don't do something like this in a vacuum. I don't see myself immediately changing what I'm doing.

"On the other hand, I want to try to take whatever advantage I can and help the University take whatever advantage they can with this situation. It doesn't happen often for any university."

Zollman said he wants to emphasize he is not the only professor worthy of the award at K-State.

"This happened in an environment that is trying to foster good teaching," he said. "There are many good teachers here. I happened to get the award, but I'm certainly by no means the only person who is working hard at succeeding at teaching."

Four-year plan

To qualify for Fort Hays State University's four-year graduation guarantee, students need to:

1. Enroll at FHSU as a first-semester freshman, select a major by the end of the freshman year and not change majors after the first academic year.
2. Meet regularly with an assigned major adviser and not change courses without the adviser's approval during any semester.
3. Pass all courses with a C or better grade, and successfully complete an average of at least 32 credit hours per academic year.
4. Meet any special requirements that may be part of a departmental mojor.
5. Complete early enrollment each semester and complete required courses and electives in the order prescribed by the department.
6. Complete the FHSU undergraduate admission application by Feb. 1 of the year of planned enrollment

Program guarantees degree in four years

Associated Press

TOPEKA — Fort Hays State University announced Monday it is going on record guaranteeing that students who major in most of its programs and follow the advised course will receive degrees in four years.

"We're doing this because the price tag for a college degree has gone through the roof for students, parents and the state of Kansas," FHSU president Edward Hammond said during a Statehouse news conference.

"Faculty and administrators at the University have determined that it's time to do something for those people who want a degree but cannot afford the rising costs or don't have the extra time it often takes to earn a degree in more than four years."

Hammond said Gov. Bill Graves, the Legislature and the Kansas Board of Regents have encouraged such an approach.

He said the cost of an education at Fort Hays State is now about $5,000 a year per student, and the state now pays about 70 percent of that cost, as compared to 90 percent three decades ago.

Graduation possible at K-State in four years without guarantee

Kimberly Hefling
news editor

A four-year degree already exists at K-State.

K-State students in most degree programs can graduate in four years by sticking with their major early on and taking the number of prescribed hours each semester, Dick Elkins, director of admissions, said.

But Elkins said there is a trend in education right now at many schools, such as Fort Hays State University, to attract students by advocating a four-year degree guarantee.

"They're trying to combat the idea that you can't get a degree in four years," he said.

About 50 percent of students at K-State change their major sometime during the course of their studies at the University.

Because of this, Elkins said he has some concerns about putting so much pressure on a student to graduate in four years that they don't feel like they can change their major if they are unhappy with the degree program they are in.

"It's a way of putting pressure on the student, and whether that's positive or negative, I hate to see students forced into a position that they can't get out of," Elkins said.

Elkins said at times it is also necessary for students to work while they are in school and not take a full classload. In that situation, he said it might be in the best interest of the student to take more than four years to graduate.

K-State probably won't begin a four-year degree-guarantee program such as the one being initiated at Fort Hays, but Elkins said one never know what the future holds.

"If it's a sales technique that works, maybe we'll give it a second look," he said.

IN OUR OPINION

Watch candidates debate to learn where they stand

Tonight, the second and final presidential debate will take place. It will be in a standard town-hall format, as close and personal as something of this magnitude can be.

In this final round, watch for a few things. For one, it's time for the mud to start flying. Both presidential and vice presidential candidates have been unusually cordial. The candidates may be starting to tire of the issues, looking for fresh blood in one another's character.

WHY WE CARE

The final round of debates is tonight, and readers are urged to watch, digest and respond by voting for the candidate that appeals to them.

Despite the negative image candidates may garner by slinging mud against their opponent, it's a good bet that tax cuts and crime won't seem as important as past trespasses.

Another reason to watch the debates is quite simple. This is your last chance to see the candidates together, hashing out differences in political ideology.

After this, all the political arena will see is an individual making a comment, and then the other candidate retorting later.

Watch this debate objectively. Each candidate has his strong points, and each has his weak points. In the political world, there are no absolutes in a presidential candidate.

Additionally, listen to what the candidates say, and judge them for yourself, basing it on what you believe is right for yourself and right for the country.

Don't be fooled by a slick presentation.

Don't listen to the spin doctors, or pundits, who want you to think their way and not your own.

Finally, remember that only two of your choices for the presidency are being represented during the debate. There are other third-party candidates who are not being represented in the presidential debate.

Even though they may have a fresh perspective on an issue, they are not being allowed to participate this year as their chances of winning are supposedly slim.

After President Clinton and Bob Dole are done trading rhetorical punches, don't turn off the television. The third-party candidates will be on putting their own views, vs. Clinton and Dole's, on display for everyone's benefit.

So tonight, watch, listen and think.

Meat-eaters border on cannibalism

MY

Page

"The time will come when men such as I will look on the murder of animals as they now look on the murder of men." — Leonardo Da Vinci

I spent many moons of my childhood alone at the kitchen table, hours after dinner wrinkling my face at a plateful of meatloaf or pork chops or steak, with my mother negotiating desperately from, "Just eat half," to, "One Bite! Please, just eat one bite!"

I was a natural-born vegetarian.

Generally, I avoid discussing it. But since I came to Manhattan, I have had so many traumatic vegetarian nightmares eating out that the last bits of dead bird I found in a vegetarian burrito sent me over the edge.

But almost as offensive is the casual and completely insensitive attitude others have about these mistakes, as if they just forgot to hold the onions or something.

The attitude toward non-carnivores in this area of the country is at times angry, but mostly condescendingly minimizing, as in the experience Jonathan Drummond, graduate student in psychology, had.

At a restaurant in Missouri, he tried to order a fruit salad and the waiter couldn't understand why he didn't order steak or chicken.

"I felt as though I'd done something blasphemous. How dare I not support the poultry and beef industries?" Drummond said.

Although Drummond's main concern with restaurants is their lack of vegetarian alternatives on menus, he has had a few dramas eating out.

"Once I ordered a cabbage dish, which had little bits of ham in it. When I complained, I was told that they were 'only little pieces,'" he said.

For me, the concept of eating animals is simply cannibalism, and to breed creatures for their slaughter is anything but humane. So the prospect of finding something like just little pieces of ham in my food would be like finding human flesh in my soup.

I don't preach to carnivores. I figure either murdering animals bothers you or it doesn't. But it does surprise me how many carnivores initiate debate, as if they want me to preach to them so they can tell me about how humans are the high link on the food chain.

It is ironic that many carnivores will use Darwin's concept of natural selection to justify the slaughter of animals considering Darwin was a vegetarian.

I hear a lot about how it is natural for people to eat animals, because we have always done it, and I get this image of a person trying to take a bite out of a living cow.

I don't see anything natural about slaughter houses selling death to fast-food chains that wrap it up in a colorful box, add a toy and become paradise to children.

I also hear a lot about how noble the animal exploitation industries are, because if we didn't kill cows the overpopulation would make it impossible for people to function because the cows would take over the world.

Some vegetarians swear off dead animals for health concerns, others as a political move, or in the case of Troy Hock, senior in creative writing, as a personal attempt to take responsibility for what he eats.

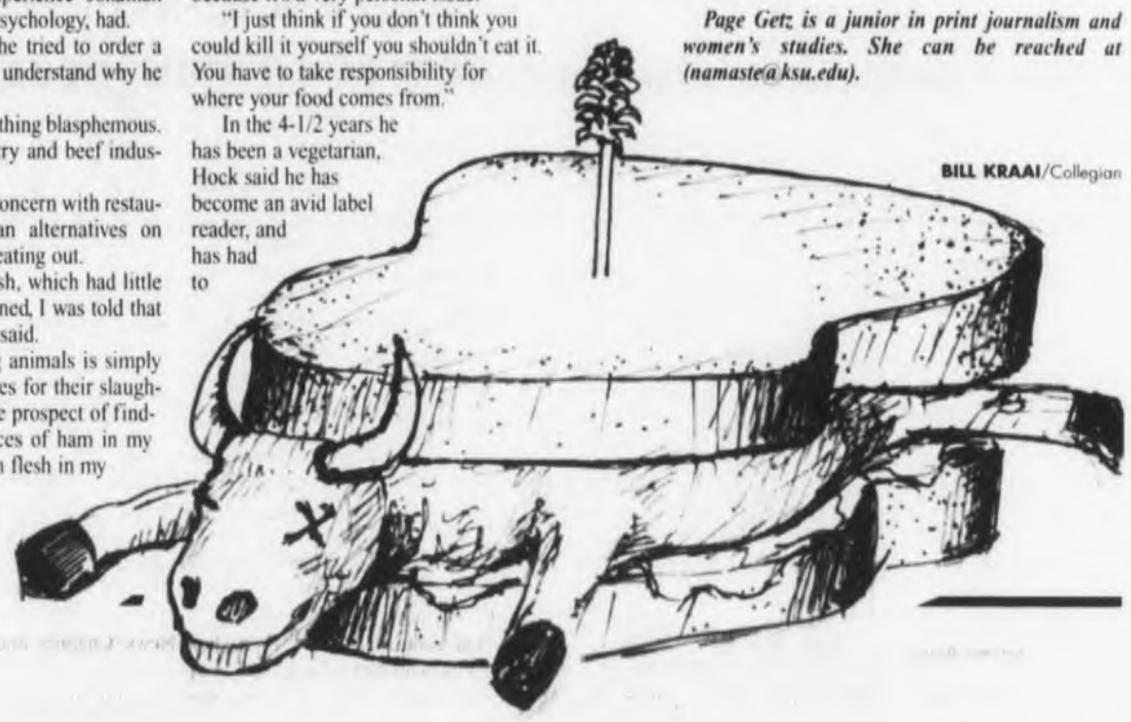
"I'm strict as far as what I consume, but I'm not militant about trying to convert others to being vegetarian," Hock said. "I'm a pretty passive vegetarian, because it's a very personal issue.

"I just think if you don't think you could kill it yourself you shouldn't eat it. You have to take responsibility for where your food comes from."

In the 4-1/2 years he has been a vegetarian, Hock said he has become an avid label reader, and has had to pay close attention to the distinction between what is vegetarian and what is called a vegetable dish.

Some of his more shocking discoveries were that Chex Mix contains Worcestershire sauce which has anchovy sauce or anchovy paste in it, and that most Chinese restaurants' vegetable dishes contain chicken or fish stock.

"The thing is they don't tell you these things," Hock said. "Granted, they are vegetable dishes, but they're not vegetarian."



Other unexpected dilemmas I've run into are foods (especially candy) containing gelatin. Most cheeses contain an enzyme extracted from the lining of a calf's stomach, and soups, crackers and pizzas contain beef or chicken stock, lard or animal shortening.

Animal ingredients also plague products such as film, cellophane, glue, paint, plastic and tires.

Dinner in the newsroom consists of a wide variety of vending machine thrills including the Hostess Apple Fruit Pie. It's apple, and it's a green package. I think apples. I think healthy, only to find that my happy, green package contains not only 21 grams of fat, but animal shortening and beef fat.

Usually in order to play it safe as a vegetarian, we end up sticking to salad, but a being can only stand so much salad, and even then we risk the trauma of finding bacon bits.

BILL KRAAI/Collegian

not a work of art

Beach art museum's exterior lacks compared to beauty inside

MY

Russell
FORTMEYER

Russell Fortmeyer is a senior in architectural engineering. You can reach him by e-mail at (rmf@ksu.edu).

What strange bedfellows do architecture and K-State make.

The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is the newest building on campus and some might say one of the more contemporary ones. On a campus whose recent building plans and styles have been modest, conservative projects, the Beach art museum appears the most liberal of the bunch.

It's not a liberal building, or much of an interesting one, although what interest it does arouse has simply been exponentially increased in comparison to other buildings at K-State.

For our beloved administration, the art museum is as close to modern architecture as many desire (Farrell Library, for example).

To understand the large flaws in the building's design, one must really look at the process the building's design underwent.

A committee picked the architect. It's interesting to note the committee's delegates, along with most of the faculty and students of the College of Architecture and Design have protested the winning design and architect, Arthur Andersson, from the beginning.

The fact that the rest of the committee, comprised of administrators, local big-money types, and various state employees has little design or historical knowledge with which to make an enlightened decision does not rest well with many people on campus.

On this foot, Andersson's design was pushed through as a Charles Moore design — which it is not. Although Andersson is Moore's pupil and Moore did have a hand in the initial competition phase, the building on campus today has been crafted, if you will, by Andersson and his design team.

Some might argue Moore's influence as an architect ended a decade ago, anyway. Although saying K-State has a Charles Moore sounds nice, if a bit braggish, it just isn't true.

The first controversy to arise with the Beach art museum has been the site of the building itself. Andersson claims the building acts as a gate to the campus, which I'm not the first to point out is redundant.

We have a gate, Higinbotham Gate, which Andersson has dismissed. I'm sure the folks involved in the planning and building of the gate in 1989 would be happy to hear this. How soon we forget.

The art museum design is a basic box, in this case two, with a connective common area. The design includes a clerestory for the galleries, amply flooding the galleries with natural light (although, a miscalculation has apparently called for the need of blinds on the windows).

The design obviously pulls from Frank Lloyd Wright's prairie style, with particular references to Unity Temple.

It's no coincidence one may compare the art museum to a Japanese temple, because Wright drew heavily from them. It's odd that in an interview, Andersson dismissed these Wright references and, instead, in a presentation to architecture students, referred mostly to Italian city streetscapes.

Moore's influence could be found mostly in slight references to Italian palazzos, such as the roofs, varied rustication levels and rambling horizontality.

It's not Moore's usual, witty post-modernism, but a sort of last-gasp effort, a muddled version. Post-modernism at its worst: desperately trying to be sincere and ironic at the same time.

Andersson has attempted to juice the Wright temple up with the lime-green windows, varied roof design near the entrances, and the funky tiled arch. These components and references lend themselves to a great nickname: disco temple.

The use of limestone on the lower half of the exterior walls has more to do with balancing the building, because an all-concrete exterior would have appeared too light under the heavy roofs.

It's strange the large roofs were necessary, given the fact most of the mechanical equipment is between the ground floor and first floor. The gallery's attic could have been used more efficiently, especially in creating a more interesting gallery ceiling.

Walking through the bright, fresh interior, one has little concept of the exterior. The multi-purpose room's ceiling is a dynamic wave, nothing like the conventional roof would suggest.

The galleries are by far the easiest aspect of the art museum to understand because the traffic patterns are simple. In this, perhaps the most important aspect, the Beach art museum succeeds.

The problems with the building, however, lie much more in the details than with the site and overall plan.

The topic of conversation in Manhattan the last month has been the exposed structural concrete exterior walls.

This may be because there is little exposed concrete used on campus buildings, but on the Beach art museum this detail connects the interior, where it is used as the polished floors, with the exterior. Unfortunately, this is the only said connection that is apparent.

The art museum is a confusing mystery, because the exterior has practically no reference to the interior. The oversized, perhaps wasted, roofs give no indication of the playfully angular and vaulted ceilings inside.

The lime-green window frames connect with the surrounding trees while viewed from inside, but appear as illegible architectural choices while viewed outside.

The arched vault walk-through is overmassed for its own supports, leaving a sort of precarious, floating, iridescent disco-tile vault that, while fun, seems at odds with the rest of the exterior.

This arch has been the subject of much speculation, including one from some architecture students that it was a stolen concept from another firm that worked closely with Moore. Andersson has denied this.

The most problematic aspect of the arch isn't its design, but its drawing power as a focus point.

But, most will be distraught when they try to enter the art museum through the two sets of doors under the arch, because both are for administrative use only. This seems the most erroneous aspect of the design.

Attempting to counter this power, the architect has devised a large ramp arm extending to the sidewalk from the main-campus entrance, yet it remains lost to the arch.

The landscaping of the art museum goes against the architect's purpose of connecting the building to the region, specifically the Flint Hills. Hopefully, a more appropriately native landscape scheme will be introduced during the year.

Exterior lighting is most effective under and in the large trees northwest of the art museum — it's a breathtaking, postcard view when walking at night out from under the arch toward campus.

However, the art museum's design remains a disappointment, because K-State could have had so much more.

One has only to look at similar-sized museums to know there are much better architectural explorations occurring in this country. Andersson's design is a throwback to the past, disguised poorly with some post-modern twists. It is no progression of architectural thought.

It has taken hundreds of people more than 50 years to develop an art museum for K-State. The Beach art museum will remain a tribute to them and to the gracious donors, Ross and Marianna Beach, notwithstanding its design flaws.

It is unacceptable for people to consider an analysis of the design an attack on the art museum's donors, staff or mission.

Seminar teaches students orientation, academic skills

ALIESA GOOD
staff reporter

Regardless of a student's performance in high school, college is a big turning point in life.

Leaving home for the first time or returning to school after several years of non-academic work can create a challenge. K-State offers a course to assist students in getting a good start.

The Enhanced University Experience Seminar combines an orientation to the University, academic skills instruction, and direct application to a social science, science or math course.

"My adviser recommended I take the class to help get used to the campus," Jessica Pulec, freshman in elementary education, said.

The course was started in 1983 as a primary-retention effort to keep students at K-State. A lot of universities have an orientation or study-skills class.

"Our class at K-State is unique, because we have labs that allow students to apply what they are learning," said Judith Lynch, associate director of the Academic Assistance Center.

The class is most popular with first-semester freshmen and nontraditional students.

"We have about 575 students enrolled this fall. The enrollment is much higher in the fall than the spring," Lynch said.

The classes are taught by undergraduate students who work under Lynch's supervision. Most of the students are recommended by faculty and undergo a rigorous application process.

"Teaching is a break in my day. I enjoy helping the students get through their classes. We are all in it together," Paul Robben, instructor and junior in chemistry, said.

Each student enrolls in a lecture, a recitation and a lab section.

The lecture sections are large groups that meet once a week. They combine informative speakers and videos regarding topics of interest to students.

The recitation also meets once a week and involves small groups of students. Classes discuss general topics such as note-taking, preparing for tests, reading textbooks and time-management.

"By the end of the semester this class will have helped me learn things I wouldn't have ever attempted on my own," Aaron Landis, freshman in animal science and industry, said.

Students can have lab twice each week, one day for each content area they are enrolled in.

Each lab consists of 15 or fewer students who are enrolled in the same content class.

Lab sections are offered for General Psychology, Introduction to Sociology, Intermediate Algebra, College Algebra, U.S. History, World Regional Geography, Principles of Biology and Introduction to Cultural Anthropology.

Since 1994 the class has served as a free elective toward graduation credit. The class may be taken for two or three credit hours.

"The class will give a student the very best start they can have on the campus," Lynch said.

Student body president envisions easy guide for students to select university classloads

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff reporter

Student Body President Chris Hansen envisions a user-friendly guide designed to help K-State students pick classes.

"We want to end the grapevine method," Hansen said of students who find out about classes from friends. "Instead, students would have a guide to refer to when choosing classes."

Hansen presented the faculty information initiative to the Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate at a meeting Tuesday afternoon.

The information had already been presented to the Kansas Board of Regents at its monthly meeting in September.

Hansen told the committee members he saw faculty and students working together.

"We have two goals. We want to provide more information about classes so students know exactly what will be expected of them, and we want to provide information about teachers that will allow students to choose teachers who are best suited to them," Hansen said.

Co-presenter Rhett Trujillo, junior in agronomy, said the guide would be use-

▶ DEBATES

Most networks carry candidate debates; FOX to air national baseball playoffs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — ABC, CBS, NBC and PBS, but not Fox, will broadcast live coverage of this year's second and final presidential debate, starting at 8 p.m. Wednesday from San Diego.

When the debate ends, the four networks will air a half-hour of analysis.

Fox Broadcasting will carry the National League playoff game between baseball's Atlanta Braves and St. Louis Cardinals.

On cable, CNN, C-SPAN, Fox News Channel and MSNBC will carry the debate.

Afterward, CNN will have a special edition of "Larry King Live" with independent presidential candidates, including Ross Perot and Ralph Nader. CNN will present debate analysis from 11 to 11:30 p.m.

At 6 p.m., C-SPAN will present a "Presidential Preview," providing a look at how the candidates and the host city prepare. C-SPAN will follow the debate with a wrap-up, including audience interviews and viewer call-in.

THE MUSEUM CAFE

Beach art museum gives visitors coffee, bookstore

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

Drop in to see an art exhibit, have coffee and buy a book.

Not only is the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art a place for the study and enjoyment of art, but the building is also home to the Museum Cafe and a gift shop.

Both the shop and the cafe are administered under the auspices of the K-State Student Union.

Chris Bell, tradebook buyer for the Union Bookstore, is organizing the merchandise to be sold in the museum gift shop.

"The focus of the museum is 20th-century American art with a specialty in regional artists and printmakers," Bell said, "and the staff related to us they would like the merchandise to reflect as closely as possible the focus of the collection."

With that in mind, Bell has organized a small selection of merchandise that includes books on artists in the collection, such as John Steuart Curry, Thomas Hart Benton, Grant Wood and Dale Chihuly.

Bell said some items, such as T-shirts and eventually polo shirts and mugs, will be offered with the imprint of the signature museum logo of the arched vault.

Discussions are under way for determining pieces of art that could be used on notecards, posters and stationary, but nothing like that will be available when the museum opens, Bell said.

As a specialty item, the shop will offer Czechoslovakian crystal.

Ruth Ann Wefald, president of the Friends of Art, said some pieces of Czech crystal were donated to the Beach art museum by a former K-State professor who had escaped communism in Czechoslovakia, but who has since returned to his home.

"It seems appropriate to have some of the Czech items, which apparently aren't available in any local stores, for sale in the shop," Wefald said.

She said that due to tax law, 75 percent of all items for sale in the shop must be represented in the collection of the museum in some way.

Adjacent to the gift shop with a stunning view through the archway to both Aggieville and the campus, the Museum Cafe will begin serving lunch today.

Paul Stolle, director of Union food services, said the cafe's menu will change every day.

"This first week, we're going to try a couple of salads and sandwiches," Stolle said. "There will also be soup."

Stolle said only cash is accepted and the cost is $4.95. He said the Wildcat card is not accepted at the cafe.

The cafe is more of a cart, with refrigerator and sink, used to serve the food, because there is no cooking facility at the museum. The cafe area, on the first floor above the arched vault walkway, offers a great view of Aggieville to the southeast and trees to the northwest. There is seating for 20-30 people in the cafe.

Stolle said the idea for the food cart came from a few other regional museums that have had success with the venture.

"Will it be gangbusters?" Stolle said. "I don't know."

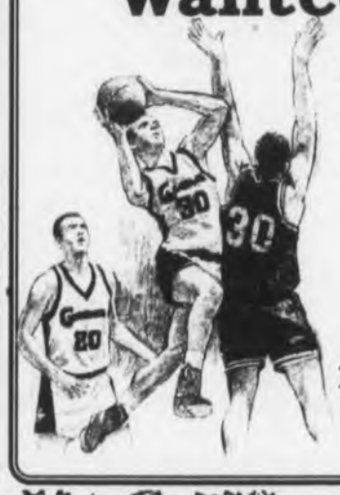
Although the cafe and gift shop are part of the Beach art museum, the museum will not profit from their existence for at least three years.

Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said the Union will operate the cafe for three years, at which point negotiations between the Union and the museum will determine whether the museum will begin to profit from the cafe.

"There's a significant amount of money just in the start-up costs," Pitts said.

Pitts said the food cart cost nearly $10,000. The museum also requested that unique china and glassware be bought for the cafe.

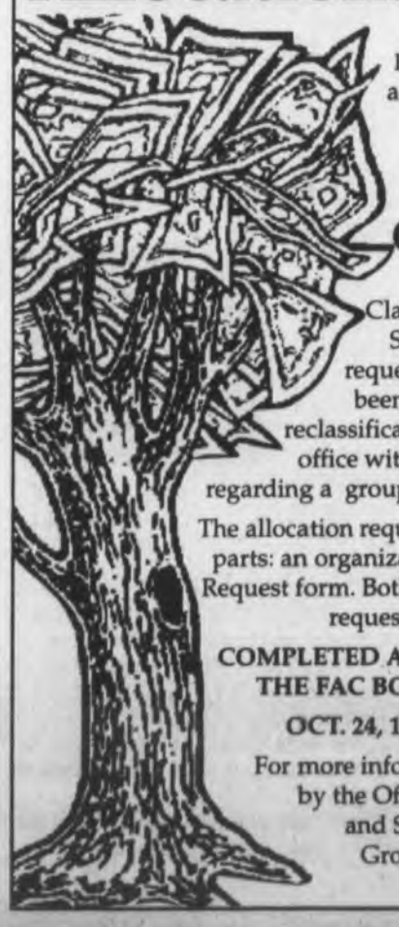
"We're taking a risk," Pitts said. "This is something they wanted to try, and we were willing to help."



Pitts said the items in the gift shop have been added to the Union Bookstore's inventory list.

In addition to running the cafe and shop, the Union will be the sole caterer for museum events necessitating food and beverage services.

The Union catered two formal events for the museum opening.



Pitts said the cafe will have a limited menu, because there is no production kitchen at the museum, only a holding pantry with minimal facilities. He said all food production will be at the Union.

the BIG show

About to embark on their 1st season as Wildcats, 8 athletes have found themselves in

Asbury hoping size translates to victory

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The Wildcats have a lot of new talent — six players to be exact — looking for their first minutes in a purple uniform. With the new players comes a lot of height, something K-State has never had.

The Cats signed two community-college transfers. Marcus McCullough, a 6'4" 195 pound guard/forward, transferred from Olney Central Community College where he averaged 20.5 points per game, and 7'0" 260-pound Dax Jones transferred from Cloud County Community College. Jones averaged 6.6 points and 4.2 rebounds per game.

Jones is expected to see significant playing time this year behind senior center Gerald Eaker.

"Dax is going to give us some depth at the center spot," Coach Tom Asbury said.

"He's improved a lot over the summer. He's big and strong, and he can play."

K-State has another seven-footer in the freshman ranks. Center Joe Leonard from Oakville High School in St. Louis, Mo., averaged 8.9 points and 7.3 rebounds a game as a prepster.

The plan is that Leonard will redshirt, but that won't be decided for certain until the end of the preseason.

"I can't say that Joe will definitely be redshirted," Asbury said.

"We planned on redshirting Shawn Rhodes last year, but after we saw him in practice, we decided we couldn't afford to."

And Leonard might not be the only one to sit out this year.

"We'll have to look at how people are playing, and if we have playing time open. Redshirting comes as a collective process," Asbury said.

K-State's 1996-97 team is one of the biggest in school history.

"I think we're getting bigger and better players," Asbury said. "We've certainly got bigger players, and I hope they're better players."

The Wildcats have two other newcomers in the freshman ranks. Josh Reid, a stand-out guard from Brewster, averaged 28 points and 8.7 rebounds per game.

Pero Vasiljevic, a 6'9" 225-pound forward, also joins the list of players with potential. Vasiljevic averaged 25 points a game and 11.8 rebounds a game at Simi Valley High School in California.

The Wildcats also have two four-year transfers in 6'2" guard Chris Griffin, a sophomore who transferred from Washington State last year. Griffin was able to work with the practice squad last season and is expected to vie for the starting point guard position.

The other four-year transfer is sophomore Duane Davis, who transferred here this year from Arizona State.

Davis will sit out this season in accordance with NCAA rules.

Lack of power doesn't mean absence of victories for Cats

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

K-State's women's basketball team has never been a power team. That doesn't mean the Wildcats can't win games. It just means that they've had to make do with a smaller line-up.

The Cats still don't have the beef to go head-to-head with Colorado's Erin Scholz or Texas' Angela Jackson. But the addition of a pair of 6'1" freshmen to an experienced Wildcat front line gives K-State a slightly better position in the post.

Local product Nicky Ramage, a native of Little River, doesn't need to learn how to win. She led her team to two consecutive perfect seasons, capped by back-to-back 1A state championships.

A center in high school, Ramage is slated to play the post for the Wildcats as well. But Shane Cordell, her coach at Little River, sees her moving to the forward spot at K-State.

"With the team we have, Nicky is definitely a center," Cordell said. "But with her quickness, she can easily move down to a wing position. And she has a great shooting touch. She's good from 17 feet in, and in time could be a real perimeter threat."

K-State coach Debbie Patterson must have seen the same qualities. Ramage has been working out with other wings in individual practices, and Patterson said she hoped Ramage could move to the small forward spot.

"Nicky has an incredible amount of athleticism and versatility on the floor," she said. "She spent her high-school career in the post, but I look for her in the future to be a three player."

> "Angie Finkes has a power game, a game of strength on the block. She has the ability to shoot with the right or left hand."
> • DEBBIE PATTERSON
> WOMEN'S BASKETBALL COACH

Joining Ramage is forward Angie Finkes, a power player from Kenton Ridge High School in Springfield, Ohio. Finkes was named a USA TODAY honorable mention all-American both her junior and senior years.

"Angie Finkes has a power game, a game of strength on the block," Patterson said. "She has the ability to shoot with the right or left hand."

And she shoots the ball well. As a junior, Finkes set a school record for field-goal percentage, hitting 330 of 518 shots (63.7 percent). As a senior, Finkes tallied 113 points in a two-game stretch, scoring 45 against Urbana, then adding 68 points against Springfield Northwestern.

Her senior campaign saw her set a school record by averaging 30.3 points per game.

Fans turn out for campout in fewer numbers

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian
PERO VASILJEVIC, Wildcat forward, watches as hundreds of ravished students devour pizza the basketball team handed out during the basketball ticket campout outside Ahearn Field House Tuesday evening.

JON BALMER
sports writer

With hopes of receiving priority basketball tickets, many K-State students pitched tents on the Ahearn Field House lawn Tuesday morning.

By completing the three-day sleepover, each participating group earns a chance to have its name drawn for the ticket lottery first by basketball coach Tom Asbury Thursday.

Although this incentive, coupled with smaller daily rewards, was offered, many said they felt student turnout was low.

"I think there are a lot of people on campus pessimistic about the basketball team," Jeff Arensdorf, senior in marketing, said. "It seems like there are fewer than there were last year."

While the camper count might seem smaller than in previous years, this year's batch seemed quite overwhelming to one first-timer.

"I think it's kind of scary to see this many people out camping for tickets," Kyle Udland, freshman in engineering, said.

The campers didn't have to wait long for their first taste of incentives. At 6 p.m. Tuesday, members of the men's basketball team distributed pizza to the crowd, and Asbury gave a short pep talk to the tent-dwellers.

When asked about the activity, sophomore guard Ayome May said he was thankful for the fans' commitment.

"I think it's kind of cool seeing all the fans camping out here," May said. "It's nice to see people supporting us."

Junior center Dax Jones, a transfer from Cloud County Community College, said he was also impressed with the fan loyalty.

"It's really fantastic because it shows that K-State fans have tremendous support for our program," Jones said. "I hope they all scream their heads off at the games, and I hope we can show them a good team this year."

The fan festivities continue today, with a morning donut delivery courtesy of the women's basketball team.

At 4:45 p.m., the men's team's first practice will get under way inside Ahearn. The practice is open to all K-State students.

Beware Braves fans; Cardinals will steal World Series berth

Shana NEWELL

Forget football season for just a moment, please.

Forget all about that thing called the basketball campout over there at Ahearn Field House.

Forget the budding NBA and NHL seasons.

It's World Series time, folks.

And this time, the Atlanta Braves, the so-called America's team, aren't going to the Series.

It's going to happen. I said it two weeks ago, and I'll say it again. The St. Louis Cardinals will make it to the World Series. Unfortunately, I guess I was dreaming when I said the Dodgers would be in the National League Championship Series fighting for the National League berth to the series against the Redbirds.

Atlanta should be concerned.

The Braves should have been concerned the moment St. Louis won game 2 in Atlanta, proving it could win in Atlanta if games 6 and 7 were forced.

I doubt they were. They were probably sitting around the clubhouse joking about the pretenders they have in St. Louis.

Coach brings humor to Wildcats

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

BOB COPE, K-State's co-defensive coordinator, watches the special teams during practice earlier this season. Cope is currently not coaching for the Cats, although it is possible he could return later this season. He has been diagnosed with cancer and is receiving radiation treaments at St. Francis Hospital in Topeka. Cope fell into a coma Sept. 30 but awakened from it early last week. In his absence, Cope's duties are being shared by the rest of the Wildcat coaching staff.

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

In baseball, Casey Stengel and Yogi Berra have been immortalized in books in which the humorous utterings of the two former New York Yankees managers have been written.

Someone should do the same thing for K-State football co-defensive coordinator Bob Cope. His humor is the first thing most people who have interacted with Cope notice.

For many, it's Cope's humor that keeps the game of football fun.

"He always had something funny to say about everything," said Elijah Alexander, a former K-State standout who played for the Wildcats during Cope's first stint with Coach Bill Snyder. "If we had a bad game or something, he could always get us laughing and thinking positively with some story. He always had a story."

That's close to the answer Baylor cornerback George McCullough gave when asked about Cope. McCullough, a senior, played for Cope his first three seasons with the Bears.

"One time we were getting ready to play USC, and he was talking about their quarterback," McCullough said. "It was the funniest thing. Coach goes, 'That kid could throw a football through a carwash so fast it wouldn't even get wet.' He always came up with funny little things to say like that."

Linebacker DeShawn Fogle said he admired Cope's directness.

"He's straight and to the point," Fogle said. "He lets you know exactly what he thinks."

But maybe the most important thing about Cope is just that he's an all-around good person.

"He is an exceptional person, a caring individual and has a great reputation with players," Snyder said. "On top of that, he's very knowledgeable about the game, and he's got a great deal of experience."

Cope came to K-State in 1989 as part of Snyder's original staff from the University of the Pacific, where he had served as the head coach since 1983.

In 1991, Cope left K-State to take over the secondary coach position, which he held until he took the defensive-coordinator opening at Baylor.

Last year, when co-defensive coordinators Jim Leavitt and Bobby Stoops left to take other positions, Snyder was once again looking for a defensive coordinator, and Cope was once again available.

And did Cope's experience at Baylor bring the Wildcats some insider knowledge of the new Texas schools this season?

"There were some things, yes," Snyder said. "But his real asset was having someone who could pull things together for us."

Cope has missed the Wildcats' last two games because of cancer and is currently getting radiation treatment at St. Francis Hospital in Topeka.

Even though Cope is fighting the battle of his life right now instead of patrolling the sidelines, many of the players said they think about him often.

"He's a fighter, and he would want us to know that he'll be OK," Fogle said. "My heart, though, is with him. I can still see him on the sideline yelling and screaming at us. He's a fighter, something he's instilled in us. I love him to death."

Special teams making special plays

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

K-State football coach Bill Snyder said Tuesday that special people make special plays.

For the Wildcats, that has certainly been the case so far this season. K-State's special teams played a role in Saturday's 35-10 victory over Missouri.

Tied at 7-7, the Tigers were forced to punt from their own 18. Cornerback Chris Canty received the punt at the Cats' 42-yard line. He then took it 58 yards for a touchdown, putting the Cats up 14-7.

"It was Chris making the play," Brent Venables, linebackers and special-teams coach, said. "We had a few key blocks, but it wasn't a designed return, so to speak."

"Chris is just a special guy who makes special plays," Snyder said. "He's been very consistent. He has definitely lived up to my expectations."

Saturday, Canty returned three punts for 72 yards, averaging 24 yards.

Canty also had some success returning kickoffs, averaging 25 yards a return. After a Tiger touchdown off the first series, Canty took the ensuing kickoff 44 yards to the Tiger 47-yard line. The return set up a nine-play, 47-yard scoring drive.

"Coach has been telling us every week that special teams can make a difference in a game," Canty said. "I'm just trying to go out there and make some big plays."

But success on kickoff returns has not been something new for the Cats this season.

This year, the Cats average more than 31 yards a return. Both Canty and Mike Lawrence have made big plays on returns.

Canty is averaging 36.3 yards a return, including a season long of 70 yards. Lawrence has returned a pair of returns for 66 yards each.

"Mike has had a couple of big plays, long plays," Greg Peterson, wide-receivers and special-teams coach, said. "Mike is able to hit the seams and the holes quickly. He just has an eye for it."

Against a stingy Texas A&M defense, the Cats could need a special play out of their special teams on Saturday.

"Oh, definitely," Canty said. "Anytime you can get a big return and get down to their side of the field, it takes pressure off of your offense."

Venables said finding a way for Canty to get the ball will be a key.

"We've got to continue to get the ball in Chris' hands, because at any time, he's a threat to go the distance," he said.

After all, Atlanta was favored to win the series, and most believed the Braves would sweep.

The Braves should have been concerned the moment former Brave Ron Gant hit a pair of home runs and starting pitcher Donovan Osborne held Atlanta to two hits in seven innings to win game 3 and go ahead in the series 2-1.

Both Gant and Osborne missed the 1994 season because of injuries —a little bit of irony in an irony-filled season.

The Braves should have been concerned the moment chubby rookie Dmitri Young with the smile that could light a room stepped into the batter's box with the Cardinals down 3-0 with two outs and two on in the seventh.

Young struck a pinch hit for second baseman Mike Gallego off the base of the wall in left center field, and dove headfirst into third base for a two-RBI triple to bring the Cards to within one. The next batter, pinch hitter Luis Alicea, walked, and lead-off man Royce Clayton hit an infield single to score Young before the inning ended. The game was tied at 3-3.

The Braves should have been concerned one inning later and the score still knotted up at three when Brian Jordan homered to left field off relief pitcher Greg McMichael. (They should definitely have been concerned when Braves manager Bobby Cox pulled Denny Neagle and dug into the sorry Atlanta bullpen for McMichael.) The score stood at 4-3, and that's where it will stay for history's sake.

The Braves should NOT have been concerned Monday night before their 14-0 shutout of the Cardinals.

With favored Cy Young-award pitcher John Smoltz pitching and a win-hungry Atlanta clubhouse, a win was inevitable. And maybe, just maybe, deep in the hearts of some of the Cardinals, closing the series in Atlanta's own backyard would be some sort of quiet retribution.

In any event, Atlanta should now be concerned, if it wasn't before.

The Cardinals take a 3-2 lead into Atlanta-Fulton County Stadium tonight.

They are taking decades of history and postseason glory into what could be the last game ever at Fulton County Stadium. And they want to show that old money beats new money every day.

The Braves should be concerned because Cards manager Tony LaRussa is sending Alan Benes, 13-10, to the mound. They should be concerned because his counterpart will be Greg "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" Maddux.

As you read this, Cox is kneeling in prayer, asking — no, begging — the world's greater beings to let the phenomenal Maddux show up tonight in place of the Maddux who has struggled all season to put up consistent pitching statistics.

And Braves fans everywhere are asking themselves one question — "Should we be concerned?"

The answer is simple — yes.

Scenting the mood

Aromatherapy offers a soothing escape from the stresses and worries of life

BETH HUSTED
staff reporter

It dates back to the times when frankincense and myrrh were popular. It was created centuries ago by blending natural ingredients together to get a relaxing concoction to soothe the soul.

No, it's not a wonder drug. There are no séances to attend or tarot cards to interpret. It's oil.

One of the current trends in helping people to relax their bodies and minds is aromatic oils.

Aromatic oils have become quite popular in recent years. A simple blend of fruit, herbs and other essences are brought together to create these potent oils.

"You can apply the oils to pulse points, in bathwater or in potpourri. Some women even wear them as their perfume," Joyce McGinn, Mary Kay director, said.

The oils are popular among young and old. Although they can be used for a number of purposes, they work best when applied to pulse points, McGinn said.

A number of Manhattan-area stores also sell these oils.

"We sell aromatic oils, but incense is a bigger seller for us," Amy Miller, manager of On the Wild Side, said.

Depending on the retailer, the oils come in any variety of scents.

"The Mary Kay line has five scents: revitalizing, stress free, pure bliss, peaceful and energy blast," McGinn said.

When applied to the pulse points, the oils are supposed to relieve stress, cause relaxation and even make people more energized. They are scented naturally with extracts and essences such as green tea, vanilla, rose and cedar, McGinn said.

Pulse points and potpourri are not the only ways to enjoy aromatic oils.

"We also sell mood lamps fragrance diffusers. You can put the oils in the candle, and the heat will diffuse the scent," Miller said.

One of the most popular scents is patchouli, although it is usually associated with hippies because of its distinct scent, Miller said.

"We have several different scents besides patchouli, such as sandalwood, rain, vanilla and apple blossom. We have about 20 different scents," Miller said.

Using aromatic oils to soothe tension is also known as aromatherapy. The scents in the oils are used to create a sense of relaxation, peacefulness, energy or tension relief.

Most of the bottles of these oils are fairly small. It only takes one or two drops applied to the pulse points to be effective, McGinn said.

Aromatic oils are relatively inexpensive and widely available through several different types of vendors.

King of horror writes for words, not money

ASSOCIATED PRESS

He has always insisted — and now it carries more weight — that he writes not for money, but because he has stories to tell and words to spend.

It wasn't always that way. Stephen King's first rejection letter came with a suggestion that he should try something besides writing. He didn't, and in 1974 he produced the high-school thriller "Carrie" when he was a teacher struggling to feed his young family.

By 1978, when he brought forth "The Stand," his epic saga of doomsday, a book whose fast-spreading superflu presaged AIDS by four years, King was established as a leading horror writer.

Now, with the serialization of "The Green Mile" and the strange symbiotic relationship between "Desperation" and "The Regulators," King is clearly branching out into different methods of telling stories while keeping his vision of America intact.

Aside from the odd traumas, King seems a regular enough guy to be one of his own characters.

He's involved in community projects. He's known to walk around Bangor, Maine, where he lives, with his shirt untucked, eating a slice of pizza and reading a book.

"There's a real lack of elitism," says Brenda Power, a University of Maine professor who organized a recent academic conference on King. "And that comes through in his writing."

"I'm a salami writer," King once told an interviewer. "I try to write good salami, but salami is salami."

Bands gather to test skills on original concert works

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

The concert and symphony bands will put their work to the test at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium.

The bands will perform mostly original works of standard concert literature composed for bands. Both of the ensembles will conclude their portions of the concert with pieces by John Philip Sousa.

Sousa also composed the "Kansas State Wildcat March."

Most of the 48 members of the symphony band are music majors. Although the concert band has more non-majors than the symphony, music majors make up the bulk of the 61-member ensemble.

"The symphony and the concert bands are two of the auditioned ensembles at K-State," Dan Beich, concert band conductor, said.

Members of the symphony practice 2-1/2 hours a day, twice a week, while the concert band only practices two hours a week.

The normal community following and friends and family of the musicians are expected to make up most of the audience, Beich said.

Each ensemble performs two to three times a semester with the exception of special events, Beich said.

The Barber of Seville
Western Opera Theatre
With an array of audacious disguises, reckless schemes, and some of opera's most effervescent melodies, Rossini entertains and enlightens us as he tells the charming story of the triumph of young love. Corporate sponsor: Manhattan Medical Center.
Pub.: $32, $28, $24; Sr.: $30, $26, $22; Stu/Child: $16, $14, $12.
Thursday, October 17, 8 p.m.

The Brentano String Quartet
Named after Antonie Brentano, believed to have been Beethoven's "Immortal Beloved," this 1995 Naumburg Chamber Music Award winning quartet will play works by Beethoven and Schubert.
Replacement for the Orlando String Quartet, which cancelled its tour.
Pub.: $16, Senior: $14, Stu/Child: $8.
Sunday, October 20, 7 p.m.

Pirates! The Ballet
Queensland Ballet
Choreographer Daryl Gray uses classical, jazz, tap, and a bit of funk to turn Gilbert and Sullivan's Pirates of Penzance into a delightful ballet. "The crispness of the narrative and design, using colorful storybook simplicity, and the successful blending of humor and dance makes the ballet and ideal family show." (The Courier Mail)
Pub.: $22, $18, $14; Sr.: $20, $16, $12; Stu/Child: $11, $9, $7.

Wasted Potential will play at 9 p.m. in Auntie Mae's Parlor.

K-State Symphony and Concert bands will perform at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

TOMORROW

Western Opera Theatre presents "The Barber of Seville" at 8 p.m. in McCain Auditorium.

Take a break from midterms; enjoy local art

MY

Portia SISCO

With midterms upon us, it's time to take a step back and take an art break.

Take a step back and look at what you're missing.

Manhattan offers lots of creative study breaks and stress relievers including plays, live music, art exhibits, and arts and crafts.

Check out the McCain Auditorium listings for a worry-free night of entertainment.

Western Opera Theatre will present "The Barber of Seville" at 8 Thursday night in McCain. This is a must-see for romantics and music lovers.

K-State Theatre will offer "Uncle Vanya" at 8 p.m. Oct. 16-19 in Nichols Theatre.

Written by Anton Chekhov, one of Russia's finest playwrights, the play depicts a family in conflict. This is the first Chekhov play performed by K-State Theatre.

With the new Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art open, local art is easy to find.

Featuring regional artists such as Dean Mitchell of Overland Park and Tom Edwards, K-State graduate, the art museum gives a true display of Midwestern art. Edwards is the 1996 Gift Print Artist.

The Mitchell and Edwards collections will be on display until Jan. 19.

If you don't have time to go inside, take a walk around the building and admire the unusual architecture of the art museum.

Built with limestone, copper and concrete, the Beach art museum is an original.

Other collections include the Latino art collection in the Director's Showcase in the K-State Student Union.

The display will last until Friday.

Next time it's 3 a.m. and you're having trouble staying awake, hop in the car and head over to Bob's Diner or Village Inn restaurant with your favorite book of poetry.

For the price of a cup of coffee, you can stay for hours and read in peace.

> "From classical to ska, Manhattan's music scene changes daily. So instead of sitting on your bed listening to the same old tapes, go out and experience it for yourself."

For art you can take home with you, the Union is hosting a print sale from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. until Friday. Manhattan Town Center will also host "Crafty Seniors Plus," a collection of arts and crafts for sale that only grandma could make.

From classical to ska, Manhattan's music scene changes daily.

So instead of sitting at home on your bed listening to the same old tapes, go out and experience it for yourself.

TW Longhorn's will present Kenny Chesney, country music vocalist, at 7 Thursday night.

Local band Wasted Potential will play at Auntie Mae's Parlor at 9 tonight.

If you're feeling nostalgic or missing the football team, the sound of the K-State Symphony and Concert bands will shake the blues away.

Selected works by John Phillips Sousa, the composer of "Kansas State Wildcat March," will be featured at the band performance tonight. The concert begins at 8 in McCain.

Soprano vocalist Kee-ok Kim Chung will perform at 8 Friday night in McCain.

Chung has studied music in Europe for many years, and she can sing in many languages including English, Italian and Korean.

If free is an important word in your entertainment vocabulary, Bea and the Blueberry Monsters will play at 8 tonight in Union Station. Bring your books with you and enjoy the atmosphere.

With all of Manhattan's art and entertainment at your feet, don't let the drag of midterms get you down.

Beach museum work leaves time to enjoy surroundings

BEACH Museum of Art

Russell Fortmeyer
senior staff writer

Editor's note: These are the first in a series of profiles of the key employees of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

Name and title: Stephanie Cameron, assistant to the director

Years at the Beach museum: four

K-State alumni: no

Previous experience: "I worked at the K-State Foundation for two years."

Job description: "The assistant to the director is responsible for office and financial management, which includes the budget, accounting, purchasing, personnel, insurance, security, contracts, assists in the operation of the physical plant, and is responsible for maintaining and overseeing endowment and fundraising records.

Cameron

"This position is also responsible for all revenue-producing activities and events that take place in the museum."

Favorite experience at the Beach museum: "Being a part of the entire building process — from the ground up."

Favorite artwork in the collection: "Autumn Gold" and "Stillwater" by Birger Sandzen.

What do you think the Beach museum means for the local community? "The museum will enable people to expand their knowledge and appreciation for the arts."

Name and title: Laura Fatemi, assistant gallery manager

Years at the Beach museum: started Aug. 1

K-State alumna: bachelor of fine arts from K-State in May 1990, master of fine arts from K-State in Fall 1994

Previous experience: "I am an artist and have extensive experience in various art-related areas, such as framing, shipping works and designing shows."

Job description: "In this position, I work closely with the gallery manager, Lindsay Smith, in preparing artworks for exhibition, also in installation and de-installation of the artwork. I am also responsible for managing the gallery attendants."

Favorite experience at the Beach museum: "A large part of my job recently has been matting and preparing Tom Edwards prints for exhibit. I have been relishing the time I get to spend with them. The works are filled with subtle transitions of tone and rich layers of detail. There are several different states of individual prints, and one can see the artist's progression and development of a work."

Fatemi

Favorite artwork in the collection: "The Chihuly glass chandelier is without a doubt mesmerizing and a breathtaking piece."

What do you think the Beach museum means for the community? "I believe now with an art museum here, it will be possible for the community to experience first-hand varying art exhibits which before were limited in their range and depth, due to inadequate space."

> "There are several different states of individual prints, and one can see the artist's progression and development of a work."

Press secretary delivers civic lesson

Jeremy Kelley
staff writer

Lisa Gagnon, Pat Roberts' press secretary, made a brief appearance on campus Tuesday to talk with students about her media background and her duties as press secretary in Roberts' office.

"I guess I am here to give all of you federal civic lessons," Gagnon said with a smile.

Gagnon was on her way to Fort Hays State University to talk about Roberts' campaign when she made a stop at K-State. Roberts is running for Kansas' U.S. Senate seat that will be vacated by Nancy Kassebaum in November.

She has worked for different people in politics.

"I worked in the office of a senator from California, and also with Nancy Kassebaum," Gagnon said. "After gaining experience with those two senators, Bob Dole wrote a letter of commendation to Pat Roberts' office, and here I am."

Gagnon said her main duties as a press secretary on Capitol Hill focus on legislature, press work, and flag and ticket requests. However, in the district office she deals with constituent services.

"Some constituents can be very rude," Gagnon said. "We just have to learn to be as placating as possible."

Gagnon said she was swamped with election work and hoped the hard work would pay off so she would still have a job come January.

"It's amazing. Everything in media is cyclical," Gagnon said. "What goes around comes around."

Spring line schedules receive a new look

SPEED

▶ The line schedule will be on the World Wide Web at (http://www.ksu.edu.courses/).

Cecily Rodriguez
staff reporter

Line schedules will arrive Oct. 21.

Although they might look the same on the outside, students should look twice at the inside.

The traditional one-column layout on each page will be replaced by a two-column design.

Gunile DeVault, associate registrar, said, "Our main goal is not to confuse students, but instead to make the whole process simpler and quicker for them."

The beginning information pages have been reorganized and in some cases completely rewritten.

The fee payment and drop-add processes will be different as of the spring semester so those pages had to be reworked.

Also, the table explaining when students pay fees has been deleted because of the new method.

"Some pages are simply no longer applicable, so we took them out," DeVault said.

▶ CAMPUS BUILDINGS

Names offer memorial to leaders

"There will probably be a popular push to rename Denison Hall. Maybe to Denison III."

• JERRY CARTER
UNIVERSITY ARCHITECT

DEBBIE WOOD
staff reporter

Donating a sizable amount of money to K-State might result in a building named after you.

Many of the buildings on campus are named after people who have given sizable donations to finish a project or to faculty who have given years of service to the University.

Take Bramlage Coliseum for example. It was funded by a gift from the late alumnus Fred Bramlage and student fees.

Seaton Hall was named after R.M. Seaton, dean of engineering from 1920 to 1929. Seaton gave years of work to K-State's engineering program and, as a result, caused it to flourish while he was here.

The Kansas Board of Regents members are the ones who officially name a building. The policy for the last 30 years has been to present an idea for naming a building to the president of the university.

If the president concurs with the name, he presents the idea to the board for a unanimous vote.

The board is the only group that has authority to vote on a building name.

Denison Hall's name may be used for the third time.

The current building is the second Denison to be built on campus. The first one was in the same general area but burned to the ground in 1934.

When the current building was constructed, it kept its name. Now there is speculation about when the building will be demolished.

"There will probably be a popular push to rename Denison Hall. Maybe to Denison III, " said Jerry Carter, director of facilities planning and University architect.

People might wonder if a building will be named after President Jon Wefald, considering the number of years and service Wefald has put into K-State.

"I'm sure he will eventually down the road. They try not to name buildings when people are still active in the University," said Warren Corman, director of facilities for the regents.

"I would certainly imagine he would be recognized for his service in some fashion."

Judge denies man's request for sign-language jury in trial

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIVERSIDE, Calif. — A deaf man's unprecedented request to be tried in a rape case by a jury fluent in sign language was rejected Tuesday.

"Why is it any more unique than a defendant or victim both speaking Spanish or Russian or Czech?" Superior Court Judge Gordon R. Burkhart asked during a hearing on the request.

Jesse Macias, 19, of San Diego, is accused of raping a 17-year-old deaf girl on June 3 at the California School for the Deaf, which they both attended.

Defense attorney Mara Feiger argued that a jury untrained in sign language could not judge the truthfulness of Macias' accuser and other deaf witnesses. She said such jurors could not recognize the nuances conveyed through body language.

Prosecutor Cynthia Brewer said: "I'm not convinced that anybody can observe somebody signing ... and make a determination about whether that person is telling the truth."

The judge said the defense could call an expert on sign language.

At a preliminary hearing, the girl testified through an interpreter that Macias, whom she has known for five years, raped her after the two became separated from a group on campus. The girl said she cried out for help but other deaf students could not hear her.

win by 75," he said. "So they're a lock."

The tournament begins with a qualifying round. Teams play against the computer. The teams with the highest point-differential move on to tournament play.

There are two divisions of eight teams, with two members each.

The teams play against each other, highest seed against lowest, until there are only two teams remaining.

Then the showdown begins.

"This has been pretty fun," Nick Barton, freshman undecided, said.

Barton and teammate Chris Thomas, senior in criminal justice, won in the first round but were defeated in later play.

"Not knowing how the other team is going to play, it is exciting," Barton said.

Letter prompts investigation of strange formaldehyde odor

ANDREA COREY
staff reporter

K-State is testing the cadaver room in Ackert Hall to determine if the level of formaldehyde in the air is too high.

The investigation was prompted by a letter from laboratory instructor and professor Jean-Pierre Perchellet, who said he is concerned about the presence of any kind of chemical fumes.

"No matter what the level of formaldehyde in the air, those are chemical smells," he said.

Mark Steward, sophomore in premedicine and biology, is a student in Human Body, the class that uses the cadaver room.

"Most people in my class that I've talked to complain about it," he said.

This week Steve Galitzer, director of public safety, started an investigation of Ackert 230 and two adjoining rooms, to determine the level of formaldehyde in the air. He said he expects to have all the results of the testing sometime next week.

Facilities staff inspected the ventilation system in the room Monday. Randy Slover, director of facilities, said the ventilation and exhaust systems are working.

"It is working. It was a big concern whether or not it's working. It is moving air," he said.

The cadaver room is about 13 feet by 22 feet and houses three cadavers at all times. A fourth cadaver, on a wheeled cart, can be moved temporarily into an adjacent room of smaller size.

The cadavers are housed inside containers with formalin, a solution containing formaldehyde, to prevent decaying at night. During the day, the cadavers are pulled out of their containers to be studied.

Formaldehyde is classified as a possible carcinogen, meaning that while it has been proven to cause cancer in rats, it has not been proven to cause cancer in humans.

The motion passed 4-0, with Commissioner Steve Hall abstaining from voting.

Hall said he has problems with the sales tax that is proposed to fund the center.

"I need to know with regards for the citizens when this issue will sunset," Hall said about a need for a definite plan for elimination of the tax in the future.

He also said that the new 0.5-percent sales-tax increase could combine with the current MEDOFAB sales tax if it is renewed in the future. Hall said this could possibly create an unreasonable 7.4-percent sales tax for Manhattan.

Hall said he is also opposed to the entire board's endorsing a county issue but is not opposed to individual members' supporting the issue.

location.

Of the two sites given the most consideration, one was on K-State land and the other was at a site near the intersection of Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard.

"There is no perfect site. No one wants a jail in their backyard," McCulloh said.

"The Seth Childs site is a good site. I always liked this site better, in that it puts the police in the center of the community," he said.

McCulloh said land for the K-State site originally would have cost one dollar a year.

In return, the commission would have to encourage the Mercy Health Center Board to begin negotiations with Lafene Health Center to move Lafene to Mercy Health Center on Sunset Avenue.

McCulloh said there were too many stipulations involved with putting the law-enforcement center on K-State property.

"The timing of the negotiations with the hospital were inappropriate," McCulloh said.

If the law-enforcement center proposal was not put on the upcoming ballot, it would cost $25,000 to put the proposal on the spring ballot.

"We know that our program can save the state of Kansas tax dollars by eliminating the fifth year of attendance and, in fact, if after graduation when these students find a job in Kansas and pay taxes, the state will even realize added taxable income," Hammond said.

To qualify for the guarantee, students need to:

- Enroll at FHSU as a first-semester freshman, select a major by the end of the freshman year and not change majors after the first academic year.
- Meet regularly with an assigned major adviser and not change courses without the adviser's approval during any semester.
- Pass all courses with a C or better grade and successfully complete an average of at least 32 credit hours per academic year.
- Meet any special requirements that may be part of a departmental major.
- Complete early enrollment each semester and complete required courses and electives in the order prescribed by the department.
- Complete the FHSU undergraduate admission application by Feb. 1 of the year of planned enrollment.

or international relations, and one unit from among psychology, economics, civics, history, social issues, sociology, anthropology and race and ethnic group relations.

- One unit of computer technology.

The task force also recommended a 17-unit core curriculum for applicants for state scholarships — the state scholars program, ethnic-minority scholarship and teacher-education scholarship program.

That required scholarship curriculum includes four units each of English and math, three units each of natural and social sciences, two units of the same foreign language, and one unit of computer technology.

Assuming the regents approve the recommendations this week, Jordan said, the next step is to prepare and disseminate as widely as possible a pamphlet explaining to students in the eighth grade and their parents just what will be required of them by the time they graduate from high school in May 2001.

Jordan said the literature would be in a form that will permit students and their parents to chart their course toward meeting the requirements.

"We hope to have it out by December or January to every eighth-grade student in Kansas," Jordan told the LEPC.

Preparation of the publication on admission standards is being jointly done by Jordan and state Education commissioner Andy Tompkins.

ful for faculty as well as students. One goal is to help change the way faculty evaluate themselves, he said.

Eight of 70 departments at K-State use no standard evaluation tool.

Faculty members would have an opportunity to paint a realistic picture of expectations for students taking their classes.

Students could find answers to questions such as "Does this instructor help students outside class?" in the guide.

"The biggest mistake would be for faculty or students to try and do this by themselves," Hansen said.

"Course catalogs fall short. They tell a little about the class, but there are no exact descriptions of requirements. It's general, but students want specifics," he said.

> "Course catalogs fall short. They tell a little about the class, but there are no exact descriptions of requirements. It's general, but students want specifics."
> — CHRIS HANSEN, STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

In the beginning, freshmen and transfer students would be the target audience for the guide.

Basics like Psychology 110 or College Algebra are the best place to start, Hansen said. Later on, evaluations could be expanded from the general education courses.

Committee chair Steven Harbstreit suggested Hansen and Trujillo bring in examples from other institutions.

"The faculty in general are pretty apprehensive," he said.

Hansen said he saw bringing the initiative to the committee as a starter meeting, and he appreciated all its input.

"We want to try to reach some common ground on this issue," he said later.

"They asked a lot of good questions and wanted more specifics," he said.

The Academic Affairs Committee referred Hansen and Trujillo to the Faculty Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate.

Hansen said they plan to present the initiative at that committee's next meeting.

Final debate turns to mudslinging

SPEED

▶ In the final presidential debate before the election, Bob Dole and President Clinton answered questions and swapped remarks during town-hall scenario.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SAN DIEGO — Determined to revive his White House hopes, an aggressive Bob Dole accused President Clinton in Wednesday night's debate of presiding over an administration with scandals almost on a daily basis. Clinton sought to deflect Dole's rapid-fire criticism, saying no attack ever created a job.

With just 20 days left to turn around the polls, Dole criticized Clinton at every turn. On issue after issue, the Republican nominee painted his opponent as an unprincipled liberal who was hiding behind election-year conservative rhetoric.

"The president doesn't have any ideas so he is out trashing ours," the Republican challenger said. He accused Clinton of grossly misrepresenting Dole's positions on taxes, balancing the budget and Medicare.

Clinton, comfortably ahead in the polls, was restrained in his responses. He listened to Dole's attacks with skeptical looks and let several salvos go unanswered, including Dole's demand that Clinton rule out pardons for Arkansas associates targeted by the so-called Whitewater investigation.

"I don't want to respond in kind for all of these things," Clinton said. "I could. I could answer to all these things tit for tat. But I hope we can talk about ... the future.

"No attack ever created a job or educated a child. No insult ever cleaned up a toxic waste dump or helped an elderly person," he said.

Trust was a central Dole theme. He said Clinton had violated the public's trust with administration scandals almost on a daily basis, reminding the audience that the White House had collected sensitive FBI files on prominent Republicans. When Clinton labeled Dole's $548-billion tax cut plan a scheme, Dole vigorously protested.

Staring at Clinton and chopping his hand in the air, Dole said, "I am going to keep my word to you." He then turned to the audience and said, "I am going to keep my word to the American people."

Dole put 35 years of congressional debating to good use in the town hall-style debate, treating audience members as if they were House or Senate colleagues, often leaning on his lectern as was his Senate trademark.

In an ABC News telephone poll of people who watched the debate, 56 percent said Clinton won, 27 percent said Dole did better, and 14 percent called it a tie.

Dole said Clinton had promised to cut taxes, then raised them, and talked of curtailing programs with racial quotas, but eliminated only one. He said Clinton's 1994 health-care initiative was an extreme medical plan and made passing reference to controversial political contributions the Democratic Party received from members of an Indonesian banking conglomerate.

Dole returned frequently to the matter of trust, saying he was a man of his word and accusing Clinton of undermining public faith in government through an unethical and unprincipled presidency.

PSU student to stand trial for murder

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GIRARD, Kan. — Gary Kleypas has been ordered to stand trial on charges of murdering a fellow Pittsburg State University student.

Crawford County District Judge Donald Noland also ruled that a videotaped confession by Kleypas will be admissible in court.

Kleypas, 40, is charged with murder and six related felony charges, including rape, sodomy and burglary, in the death of Carrie Williams. Noland made the rulings Friday.

Williams, 20, was found dead on the floor of her Pittsburg apartment March 30. Kleypas, a nursing student at the university, who lived two houses away, was arrested and charged April 5.

Kleypas could face death by lethal injection if convicted of her murder. State prosecutors and Kleypas' court-appointed defenders are barred from publicly discussing the case.

Officials said Kleypas admitted forcing his way into William's home, ordering her to undress and sexually assaulting her before stabbing her with a filet knife.

In his admission, officials said, Kleypas volunteered that "I know that I probably deserve all that I get" and "I'm going to plead guilty and spend the rest of my life in prison."

The videotaped confession was aired in a court hearing in September.

At the time of Williams' death, Kleypas was out on parole after serving roughly half of a 30-year term for his 1977 second-degree murder conviction in the beating death of Bess Lawrence, 78, of Galena, Mo.

Arafat, Arab leaders demand Israel stick to peace pledge

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CAIRO, Egypt — Yasser Arafat accused Israel on Wednesday of trying to back out of its pledge to remove troops from Hebron, while Israel's main peace partners — Egypt and Jordan — demanded it stick by its agreements.

Arafat's comments were in contrast to Israel's optimistic insistence that agreement was near on Hebron, one of the main sticking points in Middle East peace talks.

But Egypt's foreign minister, Amr Moussa, said it was unlikely that Israel's latest proposals could serve as the basis for any kind of agreement on Hebron.

"What we have seen from the Israeli proposals and the papers makes it difficult to imagine reaching an agreement on Hebron in the upcoming short period," Moussa told reporters.

Visibly angry as he talked to reporters about the Israeli proposals, Arafat twice said "See the racism," as he accused Israel of trying to restrict Hebron's 94,000 Palestinians while giving free rein to its 450 Jewish residents.

"What we face now, unfortunately, is a deliberate attempt to cancel what has been agreed upon," the Palestinian leader said.

Arafat spoke after holding separate talks with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's prime minister, Abdul-Karim Kabariti, to discuss U.S. efforts to forge an agreement on Hebron.

Wednesday's round of meetings — following a visit a day earlier by Jordan's King Hussein — signaled a new effort by Arab leaders to join forces against what they see as Israeli intransigence.

Both Mubarak and King Hussein have become increasingly critical of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, whose election in May brought a right-wing government to power.

Netanyahu has insisted he is not trying to alter the Hebron accord but only wants changes in implementing it to ensure security for the Jewish settlers in Hebron.

U.S. mediator Dennis Ross has been shuttling between Arafat and Netanyahu in an effort to reach an agreement on Hebron. On Wednesday, Israel radio quoted Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy as saying an agreement was near. Low-level talks on Hebron resumed Wednesday night in the Egyptian resort of Taba. They were expected to last throughout the night.

But Arafat offered a bleak assessment of the chances for agreement.

He told reporters Netanyahu's government was trying to maintain control of areas in Hebron which were to be turned over to the Palestinians under the accord with the previous Israeli government.

That pact called for Israel to withdraw its forces from 80 percent of Hebron by last March.

Arafat also complained Israel's government wanted to broaden its right to chase suspects in Palestinian-controlled areas of Hebron and to restrict Palestinians from building schools, hospitals and clubs.

The Palestinian leader accused Israel of presenting different texts of its proposals, first sending a reasonable one in English, then reading out an Arabic text that took much harsher stands.

Arafat said he would continue with the peace talks, but added: "It is my right to tell you and expose to everyone — the Arab and Islamic nations and Palestinian people — what bitter truths we face."

an issue of alcohol

Ballot issue could alter drinking establishments' service

SCOTT COLLINS
staff reporter

Riley County drinking establishments may no longer have to serve food in order to serve alcohol in their establishments.

Riley County voters will have the option of voting yes or no on the Nov. 5 ballot to a question that would no longer require drinking establishments to have more than 30 percent of their total sales be from food in order to serve alcohol.

Rob Goode, owner of Auntie Mae's Parlor, helped bring this issue before the Riley County commission.

Goode said the issue has taken six years to get on the ballot.

Mike Trout, owner of Rowdy Trouty's and Tubby's Bar & Grill, said he also helped bring this issue before the commission.

Trout said he has seen little opposition from the public or the commission during his work with the commission on the proposal.

County Commissioner Karen McCulloh said the commission wanted to put the question on the ballot for everyone, not just the commission to decide.

"It is a real burden for a place to sell 30 percent food when it doesn't even have a kitchen," Goode said about the current law.

Goode said one advantage of dropping the requirement is that it would be one more way government could not regulate business.

"Any time you have the government regulating a business, it creates strain on the business owner," Goode said.

Goode also said he does not think the lack of a food requirement will increase the number of drinking establishments or increase the number of customers who visit bars.

"It basically is going to make it easier to run a bar," Goode said.

Trout said one of the biggest problems with the law is it limits bar owners in what kind of club you can have.

"If you don't want to sell food, you have to become a private club," Trout said. "This limits business because students and visitors to Manhattan can't easily get into your club."

Goode said some places offer free and cheap food to meet the percentage requirement but this has created an unfair competition with local restaurants.

Trout said the new requirement would have little effect on his food sales.

"I still want to sell food at Trouty's and Tubby's, but I just don't want to be told I have to sell food," Trout said.

Less food sales at bars might create business for area restaurants.

"It could only be a positive for us," said Russ Loub, general manager of Little Apple Brewing Co.

Local bar owner denies rumors of MIP violations shutting down Lucky BrewGrille

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

Recent rumors about the Alcohol Beverage Control's shutting down Lucky BrewGrille in Aggieville because of too many underage drinking violations was denied by the owners of the bar.

"That is the furthest from the truth," Robert Leetch, Lucky BrewGrille owner, said.

An ABC agent, who wished not to have her name printed, said every bar in Aggieville has received some sort of underage violation in the past.

"Yeah, almost every bar in Aggieville gets an MIP at some time. We are pretty good at spotting fakes and keeping minors away," Mike Closson, Lucky BrewGrille manager, said.

Leetch said Lucky BrewGrille had some suspensions in the past, but they weren't always related to MIPs.

"We get paperwork violations. We once got a suspension for using Corona bottles as salt and pepper shakers," he said.

Leetch said he tries to keep all underage students out of the bar after 10 p.m., but it isn't

NATION WORLD

• GUN BAND SOUGHT IN SCOTLAND. In response to the massacre of 16 children in a Scottish school last spring, the government announced plans Wednesday to ban almost all public ownership of hand guns. But parents of the victims say the proposals are not tough enough. They want all guns banned — no exceptions. Home Secretary Michael Howard said Britain will introduce legislation prohibiting members of the public from owning any handgun more than .22 caliber. Even .22 caliber handguns will have to be kept at licensed gun clubs.

Armed with two .357-caliber Smith and Wesson revolvers and two 9mm Browning pistols, 43-year-old Thomas Hamilton opened fire on a kindergarten in the Scottish village of Dunblane, killing 14 children, their teacher and then himself. He shot 105 rounds within four minutes with the guns, all legally registered.

• CEASE FIRE IN SOMALIA. Somali faction leaders have signed a cease-fire agreement that could end six years of civil war as early as today. The congress, led by Ali Mahdi Mohamed, controls the northern half of Mogadishu, the Somali capital. The agreement, mediated by the Kenyan government, was reached after shuttle negotiations in at least three Nairobi hotels. The three leaders had been talking for about a week. The agreement calls for dismantling the blockades that have divided Mogadishu into sectors, and taking down the roadblocks.

• DENGUE FEVER IN INDIA. As the death toll in a dengue fever outbreak in the capital rose to 160, a court ordered authorities to intensify their eradication campaign against the mosquitoes that carry the disease. In the past two months, government-run hospitals in the capital have admitted more than 3,000 people stricken by dengue fever. Four people died Tuesday night alone. For several days now, the government has urged the 10 million residents of New Delhi to drain water from air conditioners, stagnant pools and flower vases to deprive mosquitoes of breeding places.

• PURDUE STUDENT KILLS RESIDENCE HALL COUNSELOR. A Purdue University student shot and killed another student who was a residence hall counselor Wednesday, then holed up in the residence hall with a shotgun. The victim, an upperclassman who acts as a resident supervisor in the hall, had discovered cocaine in the younger student's possession on Tuesday. The counselor told campus police, who searched the student's room and car and confirmed the drug possession. The names of the victim and gunman were not immediately released. Police cleared the area around the hall as the armed student remained in the dormitory.

• AFGHANISTAN WARLORD AGREES TO PEACE TALKS. The warlord who rules northern Afghanistan met for the first time with Taliban officials Wednesday, agreeing to hold peace talks even as fighting raged north of the capital. The five-hour summit held at Gen. Rashid Dostum's fortress just west of Mazar-e-Sharif underlined the warlord's emergence as a linchpin in the country's struggle for power. The government, meanwhile, offered an immediate cease-fire if the Taliban, an Islamic religious army that ousted Rabbani and captured Kabul on Sept. 27, evacuates from the capital and agrees to talks on a political settlement.

FIRE AT PHI GAMMA DELTA

Matt Spurgin
staff reporter

A Wednesday afternoon fire caused $11,000 damage at the Phi Gamma Delta house.

Battalion Chief Jerry Snyder of the Manhattan Fire Department said the fire was caused by a plastic pumpkin on top of a halogen floor lamp that melted onto a couch, igniting the couch.

Jason Graves, senior in management information systems and Fiji president, said he arrived home after the fire department had arrived.

He was informed of the fire by other members. Snyder estimated the fire had been going for 20 to 30 minutes before a Fiji member smelled the smoke in one of the individual rooms and called the fire department. The room was empty at the time of the fire.

Firefighters had to use exhaust fans and a positive pressure fan to clear the smoke out of the house.

The room, where five Fiji members kept their belongings, sustained smoke and heat damage.

The structural damage was estimated at $3,500 and damage to contents of the room was estimated at $7,500.

▶ PARKING SERVICES

Limiting permits possible solution to parking woes

KELLY KIEFER
staff reporter

Finding alternatives to driving to campus is impossible for some K-State students, but those who live within walking or biking distance have choices.

Peggy Winkler, acting director of K-State Parking Services, said limiting permit sales based on distance from campus has been suggested.

Winkler said if such action is taken, Parking Services would have to hire people to compare addresses to ensure that people use their own on applications.

The possibility that a student would move after buying a permit would also be a concern.

Amanda Lopez, sophomore in biological agricultural engineering, said she walks to campus every day.

"When it gets cold, my roommate and I are thinking of buying a parking pass," she said. "We'll probably just walk and wear extremely warm clothes."

Frank Murray, senior in criminal justice and pre-law, said he lives within walking distance but chose to purchase a parking permit. "I live close enough to walk, but I'm too lazy," he said. "I drive anyway."

Murray also has a bike but doesn't ride it. He only used it for a short time after purchasing it.

Murray said the advantage of having a parking permit is not having to walk in the rain or cold. He said his only problem with buying a permit was paying so much without a guarantee for a spot.

Jenna Curtis, junior in business management, lives too far from campus to walk. She owns a parking permit but also bikes.

"I ride my bike Monday, Wednesday and Friday, and I only drive Tuesday and Thursday because I have to go straight to work," she said.

Curtis said there is always somewhere available to park, but it is usually inconvenient. "I count on a 10- to 15-minute walk to and from my car," she said.

Winkler said, "If you're willing to walk a ways, you can find a place to park." Whether students spend their time waiting in a car for a close space or parking farther away and walking, it's up to them, she said.

Winkler said encouraging more students to ride bicycles brings the problem of inconvenience from parking cars to parking bikes.

It is not required for bicyclists to register bikes, but it is recommended.

Students find pool a relaxing pastime

R.J. DIEPENBROCK
staff reporter

With an hour or two between classes and no reason to go home, many students spend their time playing pool in the K-State Student Union.

"It's relaxing," David Roudybush, freshman in mechanical engineering, said. "I have an hour break, and this is the best way to spend it. We play down here at least three days a week."

Kris Roth, senior in human ecology, said she plays pool to relax.

"I play in between classes," Roth said. "It's a great stress reliever."

James Shurts, senior in engineering, said he plays pool whenever he has time. Sometimes he makes the time, he said.

Shurts said because he is a senior and was not expecting any lower-level classes, it is hard to go to his 100-level class. He said it is easier and more fun to skip class and play pool.

Shurts plays pool with his roommates, Joe File, senior in engineering, and Chris Stuke, senior in marketing.

"If we feel lucky, we'll play for money or drinks," Shurts said.

Shurts said while he played pool at the Union, he preferred the tables at Scoreboard in Aggieville.

"The tables are nicer," Shurts said. "And the atmosphere is better."

Stuke said he liked playing because of the competition it provides.

"I've been playing since before I could see over the table, about 20 years," Stuke said. "I like playing at the Union, but on weekends, I go to Scoreboard."

Stuke said he rarely plays for money.

"I'm not a very good hustler," Stuke said. "I play to play."

Roth also plays for the competition.

"I'm a very competitive person," Roth said. "Besides, I love the game."

Jacob Davis, freshman in engineering undecided, said he had been playing for as long as he could remember but had not entered any tournaments.

"I've been playing since I was five," Davis said. "I've been told I should enter tournaments. I just haven't yet."

Roudybush said he had been playing for only a couple of years but enjoyed learning the game.

Roth said playing pool has allowed her to meet different kinds of people and make friends.

"I started playing pool with friends six years ago," Roth said. "Not until college did I get serious about it, but now it's great."

Teleconference participants examine ways to end world hunger

YVONNE PEARSON
staff reporter

The 13th annual global World Food Day teleconference examined ways to help ensure food security for poor communities around the world Wednesday.

The teleconference involved 150 countries and 450 U.S. public and private organizations.

"Instead of thinking, 'What can I do for the people in Africa?' think, 'What can I do in Manhattan?' " said Emily Mark, K-State World Food Day coordinator and northeast Kansas Extension family and consumer science specialist.

Mark participated in the local link to the teleconference at the Grain Marketing Production and Research Center in Manhattan. There were seven local participants at the center.

The teleconference was broadcast from George Washington University, where four expert panelists discussed and answered questions about world hunger and ways to solve the problem.

The problem of hunger is serious everywhere, they said.

According to a recent United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization document, 800 million people are chronically undernourished in the Third World alone, although the world produces enough food for everyone.

"I think people who are so closed-minded don't wish to see this," Cindy Evans of Shawnee County Extension said.

"I hear a number of people say that people are lazy, and if they would just work then they wouldn't have to take handouts," she said. "They don't have any empathy that there are hungry children.

"I don't think they want to see it. They try to rationalize it away, so they don't have to deal with it. They don't realize that they pass people in the streets who are hungry. You won't recognize hunger walking down the street."

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) | THURSDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1996 | PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Local law center, bar issues will be on ballot

In addition to the candidates on the ballot, you can look forward to voting for a few local issues.

Manhattan's bars could benefit from a ballot question that would nullify the current requirement of public drinking establishments that 30 percent of their sales come from food.

WHY WE CARE

Voting yes on bar and law center proposals on the election ballot in November will be beneficial to Manhattan and Riley County.

This puts a strain on bars, especially those without kitchens.

The current law is a throwback to the times when people didn't acknowledge that consumers go to bars to drink and not to eat.

Getting rid of this antiquated requirement would allow bar owners to quit having to give away food for ridiculously low prices.

Many would continue to sell food anyway, but would have no imposed quota to meet in sales.

Although it wouldn't be as easy to get cheap food, it would preserve the local bar scene that students value so much.

There will also be a question on the ballot from the Riley County Police Department.

The RCPD wants to build a new Law-Enforcement Center to consolidate the patrol and records department, the county jail and the investigations department.

The new LEC would be at Seth Childs Road and Fort Riley Boulevard.

Although this would be an expensive proposition with a $10.8 million price tag, it would be worthwhile for two reasons.

First, it would be paid for with a half-cent sales tax, which would take the place of the existing half-cent sales tax for economic development when it ends at the end of 1998.

In effect, Riley County's citizens wouldn't experience any increase in sales taxes as a result of the LEC.

Second, the existing jail and police department building are woefully insufficient.

With more inmates than the jail's capacity should hold and a great deal of spill-over to the Geary County jail, the current facilities violate provisions of the Americans with Disabilities Act and force the county to pay other counties way too much in rent.

Riley County needs this new facility now.

midterm exams

An experiment in sleep deprivation

MY

Erin
MANSUR-SMITH

Have you ever been so tired you contemplated stepping in front of a moving truck because a coma sounds like an inviting excuse to get some sleep? Have you ever decided against it because you think it would hurt too much before you finally lost consciousness?

This week, I have gotten to the point where I am almost willing to put up with the pain just for the chance to have more than 20 minutes of uninterrupted snooze time.

For many, midterms at K-State have officially begun. Suddenly, scores of people, myself included, have begun to rediscover the fine art of sleep deprivation.

In many ways, wading through midterms is as longstanding a tradition as camping out for basketball tickets.

Every class does it a little differently. Freshmen, being introduced to an entirely new level of cramming, are walking like chickens with their heads cut off, frantic to memorize an entire semester of course work in two nights.

Sophomores and even juniors are practicing their skills a little less clumsily but still with little finesse, drinking until late or going to bed early with the thought that they can always retake the class.

Seniors are cultivating that well-developed sense of short-term memory they have been nurturing the last four or five years.

Graduate students, such as myself, are finally getting around to doing that take-home exam they were given two weeks ago, attempting to disguise the fact that they spent more time doodling in their notes than actually taking any by being as academic and dense as humanly possible.

Suddenly, assignments that should have been clear and easy to understand are sporting such inane and freakish titles as "Medieval and Baroque Yodeling: the Influence of the Morality Play and Consequent Character Recipes of Shakespeare's Women on Pitch and Tone."

We talk about paradigms of this and start using that thesaurus we got for high-school graduation for the first time since then, just to fill 10-12 pages.

I can tell midterms have started to take their toll on everyone. People have started walking around like extras from the movie "The Stepford Wives," freezing when the bells of Anderson Hall toll the hour as if they were being subliminally reminded to take their medication.

Actually, in many ways, midterms are better than being medicated. Although it is not nearly as fun, you can definitely get a high.

I am talking about the adrenaline rush you get when the teacher slaps down an essay exam about the one thing on the review sheet you didn't study for.

If you think taking a midterm isn't anything like taking a hit of LSD, than you haven't taken Art Survey I. Try memorizing the difference in about 30 cave paintings for 48 hours and see if you don't start to see dots, swirls and pretty colors.

Taking the midterm is better than snorting cocaine.

You don't have to worry about any lingering health problems, aside from that nasty palsied shake your hand does after you have had 12 triple Irish cream cappuccinos.

Oh, and there is that condition of sleeping so deeply after not having slept for weeks that you forget to breathe.

There are some people who might see that as a weird kind of blessing. People who believe that are usually right on the ding of the bell curve.

I honestly feel, however, as if everyone grows a little at least spiritually during this time of year. You gain a certain understanding about yourself and about your life.

This kind of stress can really put issues into perspective like what your reasons for coming to college were and what your reasons for staying might be.

Suddenly you become grateful for the most innocent pleasures one can experience in their day-to-day life, such as showering.

Not just spackling on a new layer of deodorant, but actually standing beneath a spigot of running water, preferably hot running water, getting all-over wet and goopy with honest-to-God soap.

You also learn to savor a good meal. Most of us don't get that now, I know, but at least we can dream about it the rest of the year.

During midterms and final exam week, having a home-cooked meal (even if it is just macaroni and cheese out of a box) has about as even a chance of happening as Fred Phelps has of being elected the head of the Moral Majority.

Someone once told me taking midterms was like going through childbirth — you remember the pain but after it's all said and done that doesn't stop most from going through it again.

After this week, most of us will be so grateful to have escaped reasonably unscathed, we will forget about all our promises to reform and not let it get this bad next time.

We'll stay up on our notes — we think. We will listen in class. That way when finals roll around, we will be prepared.

Make the promises now.

I'll see you all on the curb, scouting for trucks in December.

Public teacher evaluations will be helpful to students when choosing classes

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of columns by the K-State Student presidential cabinet. This column was written by Chris Hansen and Rhett Trujillo.

Picture the following scenario and see if it feels like déjà vu:

John Doe is about to register for the upcoming semester and is struggling with what classes he should take.

For example, he is interested in taking a philosophy class, but he is unsure of the scope of each course. Because he is not in that department, he knows nothing about the faculty teaching.

He decides to check his course catalog, but he finds the catalog's descriptions vague and unhelpful.

His second option is to ask his friends if they have taken any philosophy classes, what the course covered and the instructor's performance. This information from classmates seems to be even foggier than the description in the catalog, because they took the course three semesters ago.

So what can John do now? Whom can he turn to?

Sure, he could go interview each of the professors for the next semester, but he is interested in many classes. With his class and work schedule he doesn't have time to speak with all the professors.

So he gambles on a course and ends up dropping it next semester and adding a different course. While John rearranged his schedule, the course he added met twice. So John starts off the semester already playing catch up.

The Student Governing Association, in conjunction with the other Kansas Board of Regents universities, has developed a proposal to give students access to information to help alleviate these situations.

The Faculty Information Initiative will serve as a reference tool to aid students when they enroll for courses in which they are unfamiliar with the subject as well as the faculty.

The information gathered for this guide will be obtained by using both student surveys and faculty input. The surveys used will be approved by the regents to ensure the reliability and the statistical validity to minimize the chances of any bias in the survey.

The objectivity of the survey is of the utmost concern to both the regents and SGA, so both agencies are taking every possible step to ensure objectivity is maintained in each aspect of the process.

The survey will be a two-fold process with the first step being a student survey filled out at the end of the semester. This information will capsulize student impressions of the course and give a wider breadth of opinions than might be possible by simply asking friends.

The second phase will be information from the faculty member teaching the course. This section is voluntarily collected from available course syllabi and could be useful in disseminating course information that is more specific than the catalog.

Also, it could provide information to students about the goals and expectations for the class.

We hope the survey's information will be helpful to students. With the advent of linear tuition, every class choice carries with it a tangible cost and makes your decisions that much more important.

Students will derive a secondary benefit, because they will be able to choose the instructor whose teaching style fits them best. This will decrease the number of students needing to drop-add, thus reducing the University work load and saving students a hassle.

SGA is looking forward to working in cooperation with administration, faculty and students to establish a mutually beneficial process in which students and faculty advance higher education.

The Faculty Information Initiative will bring students more information about the courses offered at K-State and the faculty.

Student Senate recently passed a resolution supporting this initiative as did student senators from other regents universities.

We hope to make this proposal a reality during the 1996-97 school year.

Anyone who has comments, questions or concerns about the initiative can speak with myself, Chris Hansen, on Fridays on the ground floor of the K-State Student Union in front of the Office of Student Activities and Services from 12:30 to 1:30 p.m. during Feedback Fridays or anytime by calling 532-6541.

Looking for love in all the wrong places? Maybe you need to try the World Wide Web

MY

Nikola Maria
ZYTKOW

Put away that Designer Impostors perfume.

Forget splashing on a pint of Brut cologne, adjusting the ol' hairpiece or brushing that one good tooth. In fact, while you're at it, skip the whole ritual of face painting and hair poofing.

Who needs the stresses of getting all prettied up to go out, when the love affair you're looking for is just a few key strokes away?

That's right, I'm talking about the Internet, and its revolutionary approach to dating.

No more smoky bars and loud music. No more awkward moments or small talk. The Internet lets you skip the mystery and get right to the nitty gritty. If what you want is a 6-foot, 200-pound, single heterosexual man who enjoys housekeeping, you got him.

It's simple. Just tap the key word PERSONALS into the Internet search-function Yahoo. Choose from thousands of matchmakers such as BestMatch, Romance Rendezvous, Gay Cafe or Single Christian Network.

Within seconds of filling in your age, hobby and sexual preference (more choices than imaginable), you can view the personal ads of hundreds of other desperately seeking individuals around the world.

And you can do it all wearing your dingiest T-shirt, in the privacy of your room.

Why go outdoors? Why mingle with others and develop healthy relationships?

You can get a perfectly good tan from the fluorescent glare of the computer screen, while meeting gentlemen like Joe from Kentucky. Joe is interested in light bondage and spanking action. Joe's only requirement for a date is that she continues to breathe. Hmmm?

And there are thousands like him waiting just for you.

The number of choices depends, of course, on the specificity of your request. But believe me, no category is too strange. On a whim, I typed in a request for short, bald, fat and unemployed men older than 40. Bam, wam — I was hooked up with 300 eligible bachelors.

Far from the primitive nature of newspaper personals or late-night infomercials (where Bambi promises a fulfilling conversation for only $3.99 a minute), Internet personals allow you fast and cheap service.

There's someone out there for everyone, whether you're a male seeking a female, a female seeking a female, a dominant seeking a submissive or a transsexual seeking whatever.

There's even plenty of action for couples seeking other couples (and it's not for Bingo, either).

If you liked the "Choose Your Own Adventure" books as a child, you'll love this. Choose a fling, a steady relationship or simply a pen pal. Finding that special someone can be as easy as flipping through a Tupperware catalog.

Maybe you like men with hairy backs (I'm not kidding) or well-endowed men or women ("Bigger is Better; busty women & well-hung men and those who appreciate them").

There are even match-making services for people with herpes or married people looking for extracurricular activities.

Check out this advertisement for the married-but-bored:

"Finally, a matching system for married people. Now married people can get a date, find a pen pal or meet that special male or female. This is not a system to just find sex. It is a meeting place for married people who wish they were single."

For those who are single but wish they weren't, the Internet has a special surprise — mail-order wives. Go on, pick a country, preferably third-world, and read the bios of hundreds of women all looking to meet that special someone (subtext: "Get me out of this place!").

In as little as six months, "Cupid's Arrow" promises you'll be happily married to one of its "Most Beautiful and Available Russian Ladies."

Here's the bait — "Russian ladies appreciate you, respect you and want to meet you." (Translation and help in all phases of your marriage process provided). Each address costs $5.

This is just about the only service that requires you to pay or to actually write a letter via snail mail. The others provide a direct e-mail address of the person you are trying to reach. So the romance can begin instantaneously.

Yet no matter how much some things change, others always stay the same. Most Internet personal advertisements resemble the cliché newspaper ones:

"Looking for a very loving, affectionate, sensual, active, loyal and goal-oriented woman" (as opposed to a hateful, cold, frigid, sedate hussy with no aspirations).

Then there are the suspicious advertisements:

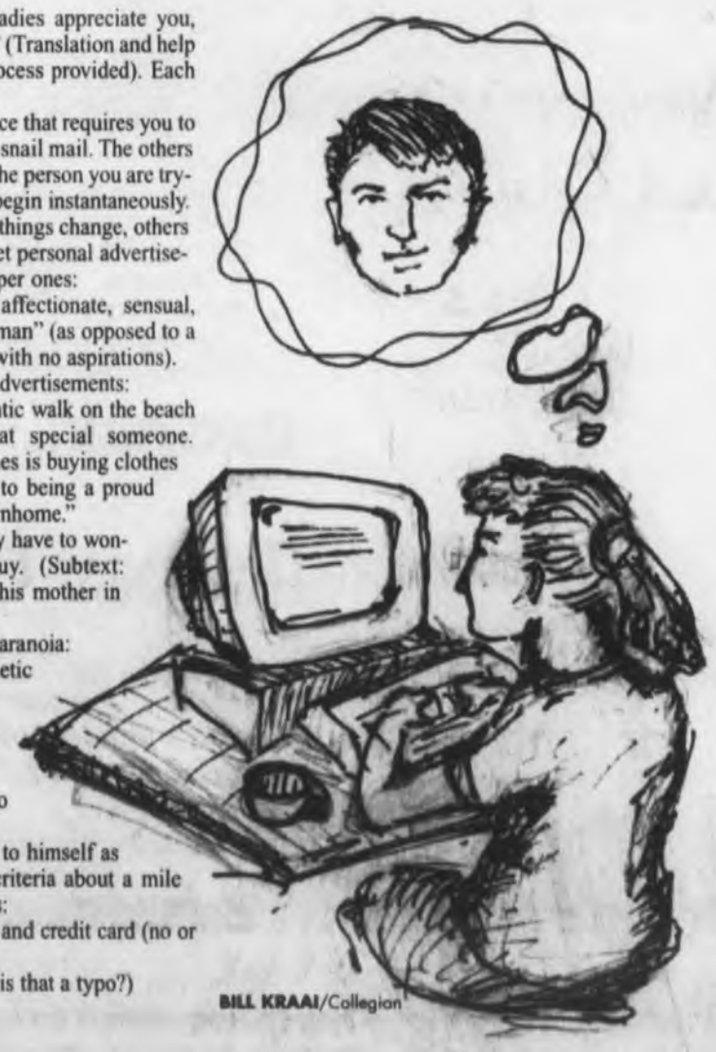
"I really enjoy sharing a romantic walk on the beach and good conversation with that special someone. Another one of my favorite pastimes is buying clothes for my loved one. I'll also admit to being a proud homeowner of a large modern townhome."

Call me a cynic, but you really have to wonder what's wrong with this guy. (Subtext: Convicted stalker who lives with his mother in the large modern townhome.)

Some advertisements reek of paranoia:

"Answer only if you are a genetic female, and if your IQ is in double digits but your dress size isn't."

Others are less picky:



"Seeking woman with two arms, two legs and two feet."

One guy, who ironically refers to himself as Low Expectations, had a list of criteria about a mile long. Here's a few of the best ones:

- Must have checking account and credit card (no or low balance)
- Must live outdoors (hmmm, is that a typo?)
- Must have all visible teeth
- Must prefer ME to day-time television
- Must not have excessive gas
- Must know how (or learn quickly) to satisfy me
- And here's the kicker — Must not wipe food particles, bodily waste, etc. on clothes, furniture or public fixtures.

Darn, if not for the last category, I sensed a love connection.

Delta Sigma Phi housemother recounts one of her friends' parachute jump

Editor,

Before putting this day to rest in my memory box, I wanted to share it with you.

When my friend, Pauline Houtz, talked of parachuting out of a plane as something she had always wanted to do, it caught my attention as interesting. It was not for me. But I could certainly give support and go along.

You see, Pauline and I are housemoms here at K-State. She is a housemom for the Alpha Xi Delta sorority, and I am a housemom for the Delta Sigma Phi fraternity.

> "Pauline is very close to 70, but that certainly does not mean she's not a risk-taker. She took a class to learn the art of parachuting correctly."
> • MICKEY SNYDER
> DELTA SIGMA PHI HOUSE MOTHER

Pauline is very close to 70, but that certainly does not mean she's not a risk-taker.

She took a class to learn the art of parachuting correctly.

It only takes a few hours to learn but a lot of guts to do it.

The day of her jump was Saturday morning and a perfect day at that. It was 75 degrees with very little wind.

The sun was shining, and she was all set. I tagged along for the experience and to share her thrill.

About a dozen people planned to jump that day. One person claimed to have jumped 1,600 times and my friend Pauline was ready (maybe) for her first.

Pauline is a delightful person with enough energy for several people, but on this day her personality changed for a few hours and she became very quiet.

Because only three can go up at a time, she had a lot of hours to spend waiting. We were out on a big field with a plane hangar and no indoor plumbing. Some of us, whose ages ranged from 20 to 70, and even a small puppy, laid on the grass and concrete to doze and wait.

What a day!

The time came for Pauline to suit up — jump suit, parachute, goggles and the whole bit.

I had the urge to say goodbye instead of good luck, but sensed that this was no time for a joke. I told her I was proud of her and would wait for her to float into the bull's eye.

The bull's eye was in the middle of an area of sand that you can float right onto if all goes well during your jump.

The time came and she climbed into the tiny space allotted for her. Soon the plane was off.

Minutes later she was floating gently, safely and so happily into the landing area.

Some of us celebrated later with a bottle of wine and a good dinner. This was the day to remember — for Pauline and for the rest of us who could spend it with her.

Reader writes about one nurse's experiences working in abortion clinic

Editor,

In September 1993, a registered nurse with 13 years of experience was assigned by her nursing agency to an abortion clinic.

Because she considered herself very pro-choice, she didn't think this assignment would be a problem. She was wrong. This is what she saw.

"I stood by the abortionist's side and watched him perform a partial-birth abortion on a woman who was six months pregnant. The baby's heartbeat was clearly visible on the ultrasound screen.

"The abortionist delivered the baby's body and arms, everything but his little head. The baby's body was moving.

> "It amazes me that scientists can find life on Mars, but fail to find life in the womb of a pregnant woman. Many prominent scientists have proven life begins from the moment of conception. If the baby is not alive, then why kill it?
> • LINDSAY NIEWALD
> SOPHOMORE IN KINESIOLOGY

"His little fingers were clasping together. He was kicking his feet.

"The abortionist took a pair of scissors and inserted them into the back of the baby's head, and the baby's arms jerked out in a flinch, a startled reaction like a baby does when he thinks he might fall.

"Then the abortionist opened the scissors up. Then he stuck a high-powered suction tube into the hole and sucked the baby's brain out.

"Now the baby was completely limp.

"I never went back to the clinic. But I am still haunted by the face of that little boy.

"It was the most perfect, angelic face I have ever seen."

Politicians who say they are pro-choice should be questioned.

I can't fathom electing someone to guide our state or country who can't even protect the life of an innocent, unborn baby.

If the unborn do not deserve to live, then how do we, who were at one time also unborn, justify our right to live now?

How does our government determine whose rights are protected by the Declaration of Independence, which states we guarantee life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and whose are declared null and void?

Either you are pro-life or pro-abortion. You either support something or you don't.

People say it's a woman's choice to abort, but what choice does a little woman in the womb have?

It amazes me that scientists can find life on Mars, but fail to find life in the womb of a pregnant woman. Many prominent scientists have proven life begins from the moment of conception. If the baby is not alive, then why kill it?

Civilized people form governments to protect all human beings, not to decide which innocent human beings can be killed and which cannot.

It is not a matter of being liberal or conservative, right-wing or left-wing, it is a question of choosing civilization instead of savagery.

The Nov. 5 election is around the corner.

We need to ask ourselves if we are pro-life or pro-death.

Attempts to raise awareness of history on racism should not be blamed

Editor,

Mark Jilka's letter favoring a melting pot rather than salad bowl view of our society raises common concerns about concepts like diversity. I have another perspective.

> "Multiculturalism and diversity, rather than being attempts to bash, are attempts to help us all be informed about the several cultures and histories that make up America."
> • ELDON EPP
> PASTOR AT THE MANHATTAN MENNONITE CHURCH

Jilka views politically correct diversity as putting down white Europeans and their culture. Multiculturalism and diversity, rather than being attempts to bash, are attempts to help us all be informed about the several cultures and histories that make up America.

It is most unfair to blame attempts to raise common awareness for continuing racism.

That's shooting the messenger.

Right-wing politics has unfortunately relied on that tactic in recent years.

Vital issues in society like racism can then be dismissed as being divisive or as attempting to demean the white majority.

It is easy for the white majority to view American society as a melting pot, meaning that minorities should simply melt into the dominant stew.

If we melt, however, we ALL change. Are white Americans also willing to adapt in this melted society? Maybe that's the first question.

Eldon Epp

Reader says we need to face our racism so we can learn to deal with it

Editor,

In his column, Jeremy Stephens referred to Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I have a dream" speech in an attempt to prove that color blindness is in, and counting minorities to determine if we have integrated our society is out. Rubbish!

Color is so obvious and so-called white people have been so good at detecting it, that people with only one black gene in 16 have been labeled black and enslaved and segregated.

No people can convince me that they are truly colorblind except maybe a new arrival from another planet.

Some would call me white, but I'm really sort of pinkish-tannish, to quote a child I respect.

> "I remember well the whites-only restrooms and whites-only restaurants where black people tapped at the back door to buy a drink. I grew up in a racist society, and I still live in one. We are all racists, and the sooner we realize that, the better we can deal with our racism."
>
> • DIANE K. URBAN
> LEGAL SERVICES FOR STUDENTS

I graduated from high school in 1961, from the University of Texas at Austin in 1967, from law school in 1982, and I have never had a classmate who was black.

I remember well the whites-only restrooms and whites-only restaurants where black people tapped at the back door to buy a drink.

I grew up in a racist society, and I still live in one. We are all racists, and the sooner we realize that, the better we can deal with our racism.

Asserting that there are no more remnants of slavery, segregation and discrimination is popular today, but untrue.

Nobody can convince me the children of those blacks who were denied service at restaurants and were denied the education provided to me are on equal footing with my own 25- and 28-year-old children.

My children had advantages that theirs did not due solely to race.

This is not to say their children are inherently inferior in any way, but rather that they lack the benefits that mine enjoy in our racist society.

We will know racism is no longer a factor in our society when, and only when, we see the same racial representation in every area of employment and business, in universities and professional schools, and in prisons, government and institutions, as we see in the general population.

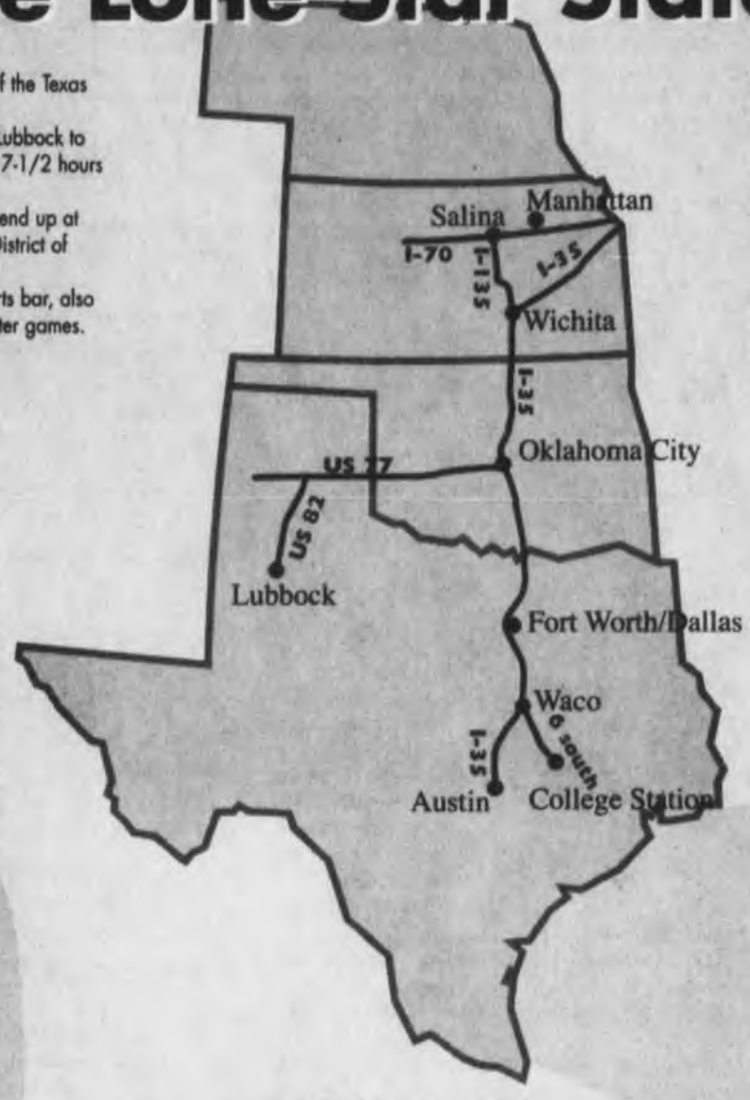
Road trip to the Lone Star State

WACO, TEXAS – Home of the Baylor University Bears. It is a simple, straight shot to Waco. For those who are planning to make the 576-mile trek and are leaving from Manhattan, take Interstate 70 west to Salina, then Interstate 135 south.

If you drive the speed limit, plan on the trip's taking about 8-1/2 hours.



For those looking for a rowdy atmosphere, stop by Buzzard Billy's, a local bar and grill. It offers cajun cookin' and nightly drink specials.

LUBBOCK, TEXAS – Home of the Texas Tech Red Raiders.

Making the 533-mile trip to Lubbock to watch the Cats will take at least 7-1/2 hours at the speed limit.

Postgame celebrations often end up at local dance clubs in the Depot District of downtown Lubbock.

The Conference Cafe, a sports bar, also welcomes the football crowds after games.

graphic by dan holmgren

AUSTIN, TEXAS – Home of the University of Texas Longhorns.

Traveling to Austin will be the longest of the trips. The 674-mile journey will likely take nearly 10 hours at the speed limit.

Within walking distance of the Longhorns' Darrell K. Royal Memorial Stadium is a popular hangout called Scholtz Beer Garden.

COLLEGE STATION, TEXAS – Home of the Texas A&M Aggies. This is also the Cats' only away game in Texas this season.

Plan for the 660-mile trip to take 9-1/2 hours at the speed limit.

After the game, there are several places to check out in the College Station-Bryan area.

UPC cancels road trip to Texas A&M match-up

story by tara wray

If you were planning to take the Union Program Council Wildcat road trip to the Texas A&M game Saturday, you had better find another way to get there. It was canceled last Friday.

"It was canceled because of a lack of interest," said Jennifer Griggs, UPC travel committee program adviser. "We had too few people sign up."

Only 13 people registered for the two-day trip to College Station, Texas. Thirty-nine were needed to fill all the spaces on the chartered bus.

"We felt it was in the best interest of our budget to cancel the trip," Griggs said. "We did not anticipate this at all."

With the success of last year's UPC road trip to Lincoln for the K-State-Nebraska game, Griggs said it was a surprise that this year's didn't go as well.

"We really didn't expect this from the student body," she said. "We have never had a problem selling out before."

Griggs said the $130 ticket price might have been a reason students didn't register for the trip.

The $130 price tag included a ticket to the game, two nights of lodging and chartered bus transportation to and from the game.

The K-State allotment of 40 A&M game tickets leftover from the canceled trip went on sale Monday for $25 each.

UPC does not have any more road trips scheduled for this football season.

Cat Tracker finds road trips to Wildcat gridiron contests story by brent stover

It's as much a part of K-State football as Willie the Wildcat.

It's called the Cat Tracker, and it has humble beginnings. What was once an old, gray, gutted school bus has become a rallying point for K-State fans for both home and away football games.

The idea was devised in April 1993 by a couple of K-State gurus, attorney Bob Pottroff and Larry McBee, owner of Energy Center-Manhattan Pool.

"We wanted something unique to take to football games," McBee said. "We tried chartering some buses and things, but for one reason or another, plans fell through. So we began looking for something to travel in."

And find something they did. Pottroff found the old, rotting bus out in western Kansas. When he showed it to his friend, McBee was hesitant.

"I went out and looked at it and said, 'Are you sure?'" McBee said.

Five months later, the two had the bus cleaned and fixed up and ready to travel for the 1993 football season.

During the past three years, the two men, with the help of some area businesses, have made numerous improvements to the Cat Tracker.

A deck was added onto the back of the bus to accommodate extra passengers, as well as a place to haul Willie the Wildcat's purple jeep when needed.

Men's rowing team medals for 1st time

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

The K-State men's varsity rowing crew took the gold medals in the men's novice eight event and medaled in six other events Oct. 12 at the Head of the Kaw Rowing Regatta.

Kevin Custis, freshman in horticulture and a member of the men's novice eight, said third place was incredible, considering the team was in a wooden boat, a heavier vessel than the other teams' fiberglass boats.

"It was the first race for any of us and to turn out like this is impressive," Custis said.

Custis said he joined the rowing crew after a coach approached him in the K-State Student Union.

"I guess because I am tall and look strong," he said. "I tried it and I really like it."

The Kansas Rowing Club of Kansas City, Mo., played host to the regatta, which was on a three-mile course on the Kaw River.

"This regatta was particularly special," said Seiji Ikeda, men's rowing president. "It was the first where we competed with the novice crew and the women, and it was a great opportunity to get together and support one another."

More than 500 athletes participated in more than 40 events. K-State men's rowing has been an unfunded varsity sport since 1963. Women's varsity crew was added in 1974.

When the K-State Department of Intercollegiate Athletics added a new NCAA women's sport, women's crew was selected because of its long, successful history.

The men's and women's programs combined for four entries in the mixed open eight event. The next competition for the K-State crews will be Sunday, Oct. 26, when both squads travel to Iowa for the Head of the Iowa Regatta.

Women's fall recruiting could pay off with talented dividend; then again, maybe it won't Wildcat women's basketball coach Debbie Patterson has some work to do.

At this point, Patterson has just nine players on her team's roster. And with four seniors on the roster, including two of the Cats' top three scorers, things look to get thinner next year.

That is why this season's recruiting will be so vital to the future of K-State women's basketball.

For years, K-State and the Big 8 were unable to recruit at the top level of the game. The emergence of Colorado as a national power, and Kansas' occasional snaring of a blue-chipper like Angela Aycock, helped, but the conference and its members still faced an image problem.

Former K-State coach Brian Agler began the road to recovery in 1994 by signing Brit Jacobson from Chugiak, Alaska, the Wildcats' first Kodak all-American. The addition this year of forward Angie Finkes, twice named an honorable-mention all-American by USA TODAY, further improves K-State's place in the big leagues.

Now Patterson hopes to put K-State in a whole new league, and she's got what it takes to do it.

The Wildcats are in the running for as many as three players listed in the top 80 in the country by the Blue Star Index. Any of those players will boost K-State's fortunes, and the Cats are also looking at several talented players who are not quite top 80 material.

> "She might be the best pure shooter I've ever seen personally, with the possible exception of the time I saw Michael Jordan in 1983."

But there is one high-school athlete whose decision could have a greater influence on K-State's return to prominence than any other.

Claflin native Jackie Stiles.

Stiles returned to central Kansas for her senior year after an eventful summer. Like many top prospects, she competed at some of the nation's most prestigious basketball camps.

Unlike most top prospects, she was named to the U.S. Junior National Team, which won the right in August to advance to the world championships next summer by winning silver in the North and South American qualifying tournament.

NCAA regulations prevent Patterson and other college coaches from discussing potential recruits until they have received a signed letter of intent. But if Patterson could talk, she'd have a hard time finding the words to describe Stiles.

U.S. Junior National Team coach Rene Portland, not bound by such restrictions, found the perfect words — scoring machine.

A bit of a recommendation for any basketball fans out there — make the trip to Claflin sometime this year to watch Stiles play.

She might be the best pure shooter I've ever seen personally, with the possible exception of the time I saw Michael Jordan in 1983. Anyone who still thinks girls can't play basketball needs only to see Stiles put on one of her patented shooting displays, and they'll soon see the light.

Anyone who's had the dubious honor of trying to guard Stiles has to agree. The 5'9" shooter averages more than 30 points per game and is almost guaranteed to shatter the state's all-time scoring record.

Stiles is still considering K-State, along with 1995 national champion Connecticut and perennial power Colorado. At this point, the Cats' chances of winning the Stiles lottery are probably slim.

But two things keep K-State in the running. First, Patterson will bring K-State back to prominence.

When she came to Manhattan from Vanderbilt, Patterson was touted by some in Southeastern Conference country as the best assistant coach in the game.

Second, K-State has associate head coach Kamie Ethridge.

A former Naismith National Player of the Year, Ethridge can provide the kind of individual instruction Stiles needs to become the best player in the country.

The fall signing period is still a month away, and I don't mean to insinuate that Stiles' decision will make or break K-State's chances in the future.

But it is fair to say that K-State has never been this close to this good an athlete in any sport.

Blue Star ranks Stiles the No. 6 player, and the No. 2 shooting guard, in the country.

If Patterson signs Stiles, look out. The Wildcats will be back on top before you know it.

Glimpse of season offered by campout

JON BALMER
sports writer

The basketball-ticket campout continued Wednesday with an early morning breakfast call and a chance to spy a scrimmage of the 1996-97 men's team.

The women's team dished out donuts for breakfast. For those who awoke early enough to sample the grub, the sacrifice of sleep was worthwhile.

Later in the day, students were given the opportunity to scope out a men's team scrimmage. After a short message from Head Coach Tom Asbury and an introduction of players, the two sides squared off.

Lone senior Gerald Eaker led the gray team, while the height-infused purple team featured junior center Dax Jones and freshman forward Pero Vasiljevic.

Although the scrimmage was just an exhibition, play quickly turned physical, as sophomore forward Manny Dies and Vasiljevic exchanged words after Dies' block. At the conclusion of the contest, one student said he felt the new recruits would add greatly to the squad.

"All around we look like a pretty good team this year," Mike Weatherford, sophomore in graphic design, said. "Our size is a definite plus."

After the scrimmage, all students who had come to see the preview were given the chance to sink a three-pointer for a free Wildcat T-shirt. And with the final swish of the net, Wednesday's camping incentives came to a close.

Today marks the final day of this ticket-campout odyssey. At 8 a.m., Asbury will draw the number that will determine the priority ticket order.

At noon, tickets go on sale to everyone. After all tents are rolled and each lawn chair is carried away, students shouldn't forget the valuable insight the 1996 Wildcat campout provided.

Some students said they think the vibes from the open practice will lead to great things.

"I just can't wait to beat them Hawks this year," Weatherford said.

Putting game crimps Cats' plan for victory

JON BALMER
sports writer

The K-State women's golf team returned from last weekend's Marilynn Smith Invitational in Lawrence with an eighth-place finish in the 14-team field.

Sophomore Jane Yi led the Wildcats with a 19th-place finish overall, while junior Ann Slater and sophomore Mitzi Taylor tied for 20th.

While many of the Wildcat players shot well individually, coach Kristi Knight said the weekend was less than satisfying for the team.

"It was really quite disappointing," Knight said. "The tournament for us was a combination of bad luck and lack of execution."

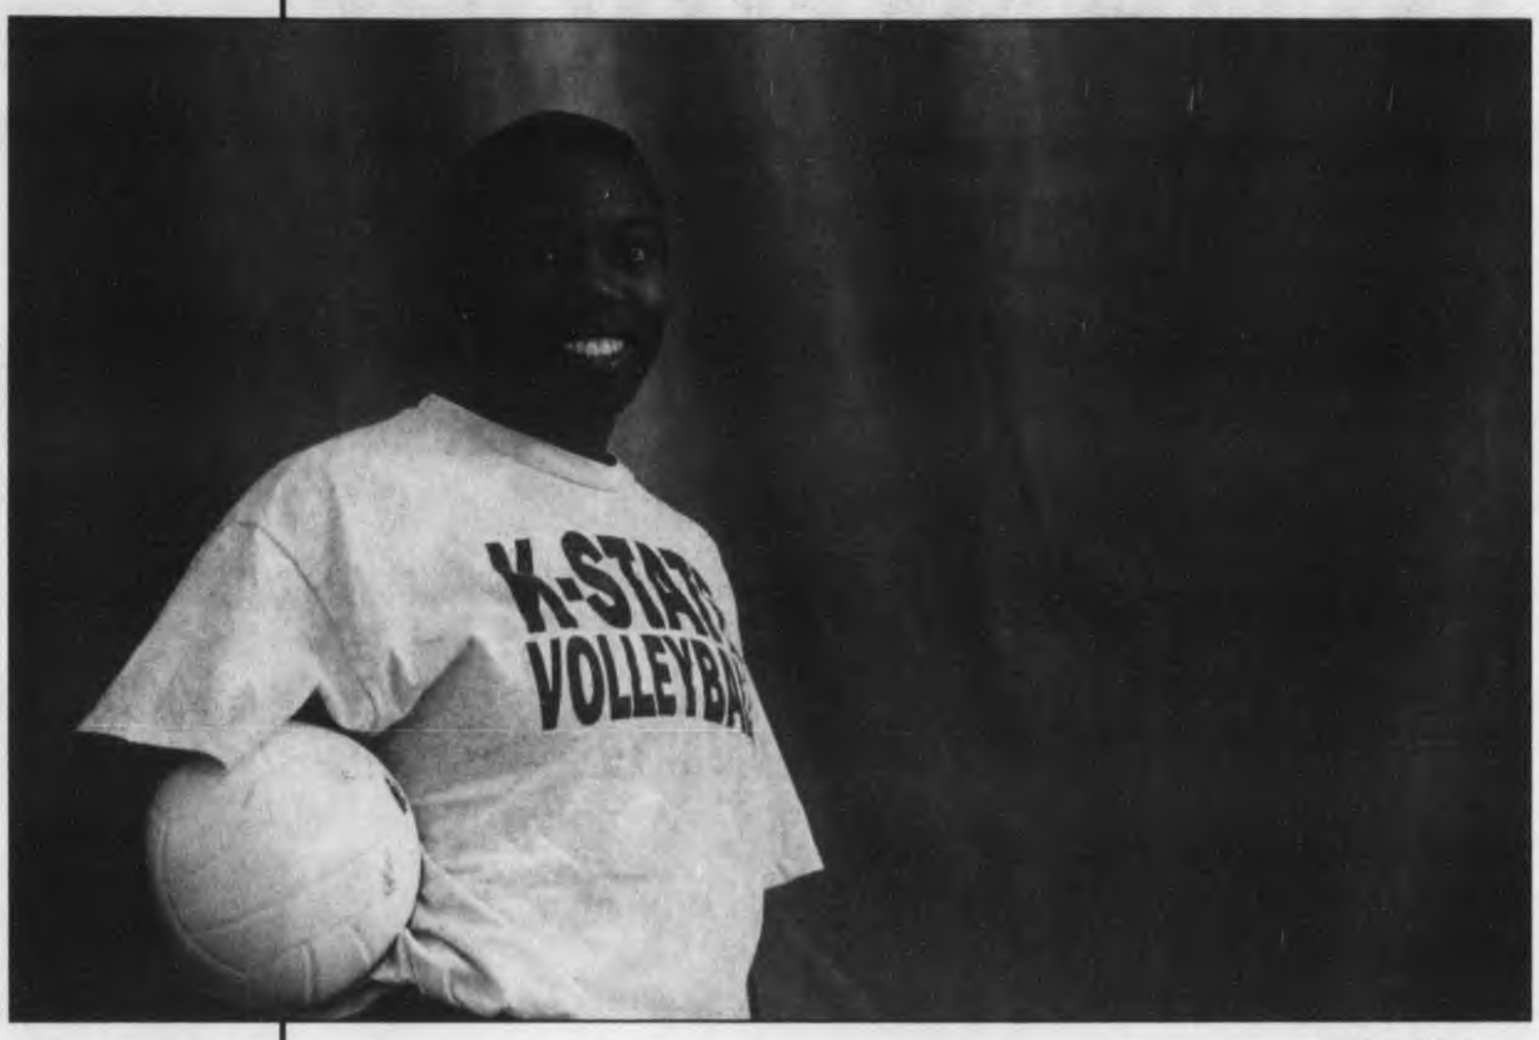
Knight said she felt the Cats had trouble finishing their short game, which contributed to the eighth-place finish. The Alvomar course played a part in hindering the team's success this past weekend.

"The course featured some big greens, which hurt our putting game," Knight said.

Bad luck struck when freshman Carrie Chambers suffered an injury that will keep her off the links for three weeks.

"We're lucky it happened this early in the season," Knight said. "Carrie should return after the break, so it's not the end of the world."

After a strong fourth-place showing in the Big 12 Preview the weekend before, Knight had hoped to carry over some of the success.



"If we had shot the same score we had at the Preview, we would have won by nine strokes," Knight said.

The Wildcats now focus their attention on the upcoming Lady Trojan Invitational at the University of Arkansas-Little Rock, which will cap off three straight weekends of play and bring the fall session to a close. Knight said her view of the team's heading into the break was muddled.

"Right now my feelings are a little mixed," Knight said. "We're still hitting the ball well, but our short game needs some improvement."

The Cats begin play Monday and conclude with Tuesday..

Record books have Young's name etched all over them

CLIF PALMBERG/Collegian

TOIE YOUNG, senior play-set hitter, is a driving force behind the K-State volleyball team. She ranks third on K-State's all-time list in kills, fourth for all-time total attacks and second in attacks per game. She also ranks in the top 10 in digs and games played.

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

Take a look at the all-time individual career records in K-State volleyball, and you would find Yolanda Young's name in about half the categories.

Topping the list is Young's third all-time ranking in kills, fourth all-time in total attacks, and second in attacks per game. Young also ranks in the top 10 in digs and games played.

But volleyball wasn't always for Young, who goes by Toie.

"I used to anchor the 4x100 and did high jump, high hurdles and long jump," Young said. "I wasn't all that good at track, but because I had pretty decent speed and a good vertical, I had good potential."

A promising career, a love for volleyball and the opportunity to play at several Division I schools swayed Young's dreams of becoming a track star to becoming a volleyball legend.

Another stroke of luck for the Wildcats is that Young came to K-State after Nebraska backed out of a scholarship at the last minute.

"I originally wanted to go to Nebraska," Young said. "They recruited me as if they were going to give me a scholarship, but then they asked me after a couple of months if I could afford to come walk-on.

"It messed up their chances, because they didn't tell me right away. If they would have let me know right away they weren't going to give me a scholarship, I would have walked on and red-shirted my freshman year."

Several other schools offered Young scholarships, but K-State won the vote.

"I really like the campus, and I liked the team," Young said. "It's also not too far from home, but the attitude of the team really sold me on this program."

In 1993, K-State went 7-25 in Young's freshman season under then coach Patti Hagemeyer. That season gave Young thoughts of transferring to Nebraska.

"Patti taught me a lot about the game, but she wasn't a coach that worked well with me," Young said. "She wasn't much of a people person and tried to motivate us by putting us down. Her style took us out of our game mentally.

"I decided that it was either the coach or me that had to leave and Patti was released at the end of the season."

Current coach Jim Moore was hired in July 1994 and has started what may be one of the biggest turnarounds in collegiate volleyball history.

In Moore's third year of coaching, Moore has earned a 50-27 record at the helm and last year took the Cats to their first post-season play since 1979.

Young said she admitted a lot has changed since her first year.

"My mental attitude and the way I approach the game is totally different," Young said. "Now I play for the love of the game.

"The program has also changed tremendously. We used to get two pairs of shoes and socks, and we would have to turn them in at the end of the season. Now we have everything that we would need. It's one of the marks of a good volleyball program.

"It's great for the morale of the team. It feels good to know that the University and community supports us the way they do."

Long-time Wildcat fan killed in auto accident

SCOTT PHILLIPS
staff reporter

K-State fans all over the region can be identified through alumni events, athletic contests, library dedications and, most often, through their own family.

Eric Magette, a junior in kinesiology from Claflin, recently had a grandfather who died and who, Magette said, was "a huge Cat fan that never attended a class at K-State."

Magette's grandfather, Sherwin Ammeter, a former county worker and grain truck driver from Peabody, was killed Sept. 10 in an automobile accident in which a train ran into the truck he was driving while crossing the tracks.

His family dedicated his memory with respect and style by, of all things, putting K-State football season tickets in his hand before the funeral.

"We had thought about putting a powercat magnet on the casket," Magette said.

"Instead, after my little sister grabbed the tickets and put them in his right hand, it felt just right."

Ammeter, 66, had been a proud family man with one grandchild, three children and two in-laws who have attended K-State.

His sudden death stirred emotions of grief and respect for a man who one might guess was one of the biggest K-State fans in the Midwest.

"I had a lot of talks with my grandpa about K-State football, classes and so on," Magette said. "He's really proud of his grandchildren and was a huge K-State fan in every sense of the word. He bought K-State football tickets every year, even the bad times."

Magette said he feels as though this loss symbolized many things for people at K-State and how everyone can contribute in some way.

"My grandpa's life was a tribute to the little guy," Magette said. "He would cut his right hand off for you. He was tough as nails. He worked hard and was a big role model in my life.

"My grandfather didn't donate a lot of money for a library or Astroturf or anything," Magette said. "Instead, by sending his family to K-State and taking the most genuine interest in every aspect, including football and classes, he found his own way of taking stock in the University and the community."

Contributions, large and small, are a part of K-State athletics, K-State academics and quite simply, K-State life.

As for this story, those contributions also consist of doing the best we can with our time at K-State and our time on earth.

It's the little things that make the big things bigger and better. Sherwin Ammeter could be considered a dedicated parent and grandparent as well as a powerful Powercat.

TRIP

Artificial turf was added to the interior of the bus with yard markers and a cat head at the 50-yard line.

The sky walk was added to the top of the bus before the 1994 UNLV game. Because the Cat Tracker was hauling the K-State cheerleaders, as well as its customary fans across the country, they felt they needed more space.

Pottroff described the Cat Tracker as a never-ending donation factory.

"You know you're starting with a school bus, so there's really not much you can do to screw it up," Pottroff said. "So every idea we get, we'll probably try."

Pottroff and McBee said the Cat Tracker is essentially a donation to the University to use however it can be used.

Not only has the bus carried cheerleaders to games, but it has also been used by the Classy Cats.

The K-State basketball program has used it as a shuttle bus for its camps in the summer.

"It's done a lot more for the University than we ever thought it would," McBee said.

The Cat Tracker is auctioned off typically for about five games per year, home or away, to different Catbacker clubs across Kansas.

This year the two K-State seniors who raise the most money in the scholarship drive will win a free trip to the Colorado game, including dinner and hotel accommodations.

Otherwise, it's usually about the same group of people that rides on the bus — family and friends of McBee and Pottroff.

There have been many memorable trips made by the Cat Tracker in its three-year existence. For Pottroff, the trip to the 1993 Copper Bowl was the ultimate.

"Since that was our first victory in a bowl game, that one probably had as much of a fairy tale atmosphere about it," Pottroff said.

The Cat Tracker has missed just one game in the past three seasons, the 1994 Aloha Bowl in Hawaii. However, the ocean will not stop the Cat Tracker again, should the opportunity arise a second time.

"This year we'd go to the Aloha Bowl, because we'd know ahead of time how to get there," Pottroff said. "It takes quite a while to get it over there, but we'd get it this time."

Injuries sending Missouri to cellar of Big 12

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Injury-laden Missouri could really use the break. But at 2-4, this is no time to be taking a breather.

"It's a double-edged sword," Coach Larry Smith said of this weekend's bye. "We've got some guys that are beat up, and we need to get them healthy.

"But we also have some things that we need to work on. We need to get a lot better."

The injuries proved to be an Achilles' heel Saturday against K- State, when the Wildcats took advantage of Missouri's vulnerable defense in a 35-10 victory. The Tigers are now 0-3 in the Big 12.

Smith is hoping the week off will be enough time to get healthy for defensive leaders DeMontie Cross and Joe Love , who played with injuries, and linebacker Darryl Chatman, who was sidelined the past two games with a sprained knee.

Same goes for quarterback Corby Jones, who suffered a hip pointer against Southern Methodist two weeks ago and was replaced in the starting lineup Saturday for the first time this season by Kent Skornia.

"I should be all right by the end of next week," said Jones, who was 0-for-1 and lost a total of 5 yards on seven carries. "'I really didn't take any real bad shots. I had a hard plastic pad on top of the thicker hip pad I had been wearing. It's just pretty sore right now."

The Tigers lost speedy wide receiver Ricky Ross for the season with a broken left ankle. Inside linebacker Barry Odom suffered a concussion and is questionable for the Oklahoma State game on Oct. 26.

High-flying students from neighboring states land on K-State-Salina campus for aviation competition

K-STATE-SALINA pilot Dave Harter and Navigation Officer Cory Williams, junior in airway science, look at course maps while waiting to take off for the navigation event.

KYLE BROOKS (left) and Matt Littrell, both sophomores studying to be professional pilots, pull their plane to the refueling station after completeing their navigation-event flight.

UNIVERSITY OF NEBRASKA-OMAHA students Takuya Yamamoto, (left), and Seth Dokter plot flight courses on a map while waiting for teammates to return from the navigation event. Pilots in the event had to plot flight courses, and estimate time and fuel consumption for the course. The pilot and a navigation officer had to fly the course without any help from computer navigation equipment.

PREFLIGHT CREWS check their teams' airplanes before they compete in the SAFECON navigation event at K-State-Salina Wednesday morning. The competition is held annually in 11 different regions across the United States. This was the first time the competition was at K-State-Salina.

Early Wednesday morning before the sun rose but after the stars went to bed, hordes of people gathered at the Aeronautical Center on K-State-Salina's campus.

The National Intercollegiate Flying Association Region Six Safety Conference was about to begin. Students from Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska and Oklahoma struggled to awaken for a day they had anticipated for months.

"This is the first time the conference has been held in Kansas. We worked very hard getting the events organized," Dave Pianalto, K-State coach, said.

Oklahoma University also prepared for the event.

"We've been really excited. We've done a lot of fundraising, like plane washes at the hangar, especially when people fly in for football games," said Janet Koberg, Oklahoma University coach.

Koberg's team of five members met twice a week to prepare for the competition. They scheduled practice time for landings, planned navigation practices and looked at old tests to get ready for the events.

"Depending on conditions, some events can be more difficult. Some students have a knack for landings and others for navigation," she said.

The seven events take place during four days, Wednesday through Saturday. Some free-time activities are planned for the evenings, but Koberg said she planned to rest at night.

The navigation and aircraft identification events took place Wednesday. Computer accuracy, power-off and power-on landings, short field landing and message drop are other events.

"For the message drop, a pilot flies 200 feet above the landing strip, opens the window and drops a balsa-wood container as close as possible to an area marked on the ground," Ben Bailey, Western Oklahoma State College coach, said.

Bailey, a retired Air Force bomber pilot, said he remembers when the Salina facility was the Smoky Hills Air Force Base.

"This is a beautiful facility," Bailey said. "Western Oklahoma isn't like Kansas. It's a small school, a two-year school. We only have 10 or 12 people in flight training."

"Even though it's a small school, we've been competing since the late 1970s," Bailey said.

Under Bailey's watchful eye, teammates Fred Weller and Jim Brown went through a preflight check of their individual airplanes. Weller and Brown checked the lights and gas gauges. Later, they would manually check the gas gauges with a dipstick, then check the general condition of the airplane.

"I think we have the smallest team," Weller said. "There are roughly 40 or 50 contestants."

To compete, a student must have a private pilot's license. If students are flight instructors, or have been flight instructors, they cannot compete. The top three teams qualifying in the regional are invited to the national.

If students do not have a private pilot's license, they can compete in ground events. Kristin Bass, junior in finance at Oklahoma State University, who has her license, said she also plans to take a flight computer test called SCAN.

SCAN is a test of rules and regulations, weights and balances, and a simulator test.

"I grew up in aviation. Both my parents flew as a hobby, and both my grandfathers flew in World War II," Bass said.

Bass also planned to compete in the power-on and power-off events.

She said she prefers power-off because the plane seems to get closer to the line.

This is her first competition, but Bass said she felt her teammates had really been supportive.

"We've got a really great flight team, really supportive of each other," she said.

Another team member, Stacey Schuermann, said you have to treat competition like a class. You have to study for it and show up for the team.

Take a walk on the darker side of the Internet

website review

Every week, Darin Siefkes, senior in history, and radio and television, will review various sites on the World Wide Web.

Do you know an interesting site, have a question or want to comment?

E-mail Siefkes at (wings@ksu.ksu.edu).

Some people think I have a cool job. I get to surf the Internet and then the Collegian pays me to write about what I see and do.

But it isn't all roses. All writers have to answer to beings known as editors.

They are the ones who make our brilliant work look like a 12-year-old wrote it because of such silly things as ethics and libel.

This week we explore the side of the Net that they don't want you to see.

The Holy See, Vatican Web Site (http://www.vatican.va/)

People who are looking for their souls should visit the smallest country in the world to find it.

There is a lot of construction going on in this homepage, but it does have a notable feature or two.

It is maintained by the Vatican Information Service to help provide information to the masses on what Pope John Paul II is doing.

If he is meeting with a head of state or blessing a row boat, the V.I.S. will tell you what the Holy Father is doing.

Later on the V.I.S. plans to add official documents from the Holy See, which will even have a search engine.

The biggest complaint I have is that I can't seem to find Pope John Paul II's e-mail address.

If you happen to know it, please send it to me.

Antipas' Home Page (http://www.ksu.edu/~antipas/)

No search for God is complete without a quick journey into the right wing. Antipas Phelps' homepage is at least interesting even if you disagree with him.

Some lovely pictures of Fred Phelps and his posse are here, and they are suitable for framing. They also fit nicely on dart boards.

For those who were not around this summer, there was some controversy about whether Phelps' advertising future protests violated the University's Web standards.

I do love the "Topeka is Hell" section.

This is worth reading even if you disagree with Antipas. (And people think Phelps doesn't have a sense of humor.)

A word of warning, though. The fliers that are saved as graphics shouldn't be loaded on any system without mucho memory. Instead of using Adobe Acrobat, the fliers were just scanned then saved, so be careful.

The rest of the page is entertaining to say the least. After reading the letter to President Clinton, I could picture Bill tossing the letter into Fred's file cabinet at the secret service.

My biggest disappointment with this page is that it sounded like it came straight from Phelps' mouth.

I was hoping it would give a fresh spin on what the Westboro Baptist Church in Topeka is about.

All that is there is the same thing we hear every time Phelps pickets.

Independence Day (http://www.id4.com/)

The most hyped movie of the summer made a huge splash on the Net with its spectacular homepage, which is well worth the time for a visit.

Just remember to download the Shockwave plug-in or half of this page doesn't work.

I expected a cheap, annoying, trying-to-sell-the-movie-type homepage. I was pleasantly surprised to find an entertaining, informative homepage that has taken a lot of time and effort to create.

The graphics and special effects are cool and ID4 has great sounds throughout the page.

There is plenty to do, including a couple text adventures that are OK. I liked the straw polls that give a feel of what the Net population thinks of aliens and how much we trust our government. (Warning: Big Brother is watching!)

What I liked the best at this site was its Area 51. Once there, go to the Alien HQ.

This section is full of links about aliens, Area 51, UFOs and other weird things out there. Surfers can easily lose days just surfing these links.

ID4 created a new page on Oct. 3 that is worth the trouble of revisiting. I think it's for the home-video release of Independence Day in November.

The new North American Web site is packed with some really cool contests.

It has an online flight simulator that may not compete with CD-ROM versions, but it is still entertaining.

My biggest difficulty with this site is that it slows down as more people start surfing it.

Farrakhan: Million Man March led to drop in crime

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan, gathering 10,000 black men, women and children on the first anniversary of the Million Man March, said Wednesday that last year's rally led to a national drop in crime.

"I know Clinton wants to take credit for it," Farrakhan said, speaking from behind a podium ringed with bulletproof glass. "I know the police want to take credit for it. The real truth is that the spirit of the Million Man March should take credit for it."

At last year's march on the nation's capital, Farrakhan led black men in a pledge to never raise their hands with a knife or a gun to beat or cut or shoot any member of their families or any human being.

The spirit fostered at that rally of at least 400,000 black men contributed to a national decrease in crime, Farrakhan said. New FBI figures showed murder was down 7 percent, rape down 5 percent and violent crimes down 3 percent in 1995.

The crowd packed Dag Hammarskjold Plaza outside the United Nations for a "World's Day of Atonement."

It opened with a Muslim prayer and a memorial to influential blacks throughout U.S. history including Harriet Tubman, Paul Robeson, Malcolm X and recently slain rapper Tupac Shakur.

Mayor Rudolph Giuliani stayed away, saying the demonstration would be overshadowed by what he said was Farrakhan's rhetoric of hatred. Some in the crowd disagreed.

"It's not about Farrakhan," said Jerry Walter, 56, a retired city worker from the Bronx. "It's about respecting yourself, your family and your community."

Walter said last year's march in Washington was the best thing he ever did.

"I come not as an enemy, but as a friend," Farrakhan said to the crowd. He then launched into his topic:,"Can the United Nations avert the war of Armageddon?"

Organizers said the rally would issue a worldwide appeal against exploitation and violence, and call upon nations to repent and atone for injustice.

The Rev. Al Sharpton told the crowd people should take credit for New York City's drastic drop in crime since 1993.

"Crime is down because love is up," said Sharpton, who said he plans to run for mayor next year. "Crime is down because hope is up. Giuliani didn't lower crime. Crime is down because we lifted ourselves up."

Winnie Mandela, the former wife of South African president Nelson Mandela, appeared on stage but didn't speak. Former NAACP Executive Director Benjamin Chavis was expected to speak later today.

Chavis accused Giuliani Tuesday of racial insensitivity for saying he would boycott the rally.

"It appears Mayor Giuliani needs atonement," Chavis said. "If he would avail himself to meet ... Farrakhan, his views would change."

always possible because some students might go into the restaurant at 10 p.m. and then try to slip into the bar after the doormen take their spots.

"Fake IDs sometimes fool us," Leetch said. "I sometimes can't tell between a fake ID and a real ID, but an ABC agent and cops can, and that's when we get fined."

When a minor in a bar gets caught by a police officer or an ABC agent, the minor and the bar receive fines, but the bar's fine is much stiffer. The fine for a bar includes a monetary fine and a two-day suspension of its alcohol license.

Leetch said Lucky BrewGrille has been one of the better bars in Aggieville to stop underage drinkers from entering the bar.

"Our security is always tight, but occasionally a minor gets in," Leetch said.

He said the rumor was probably not spread by people who knew Lucky BrewGrille's situation.

"We have served what we needed to do but are now clean," Leetch said. "Bars like to spread rumors about other bars."

Dole and Clinton took questions from a group of 113 undecided voters from the San Diego area who were selected by the Gallup polling organization.

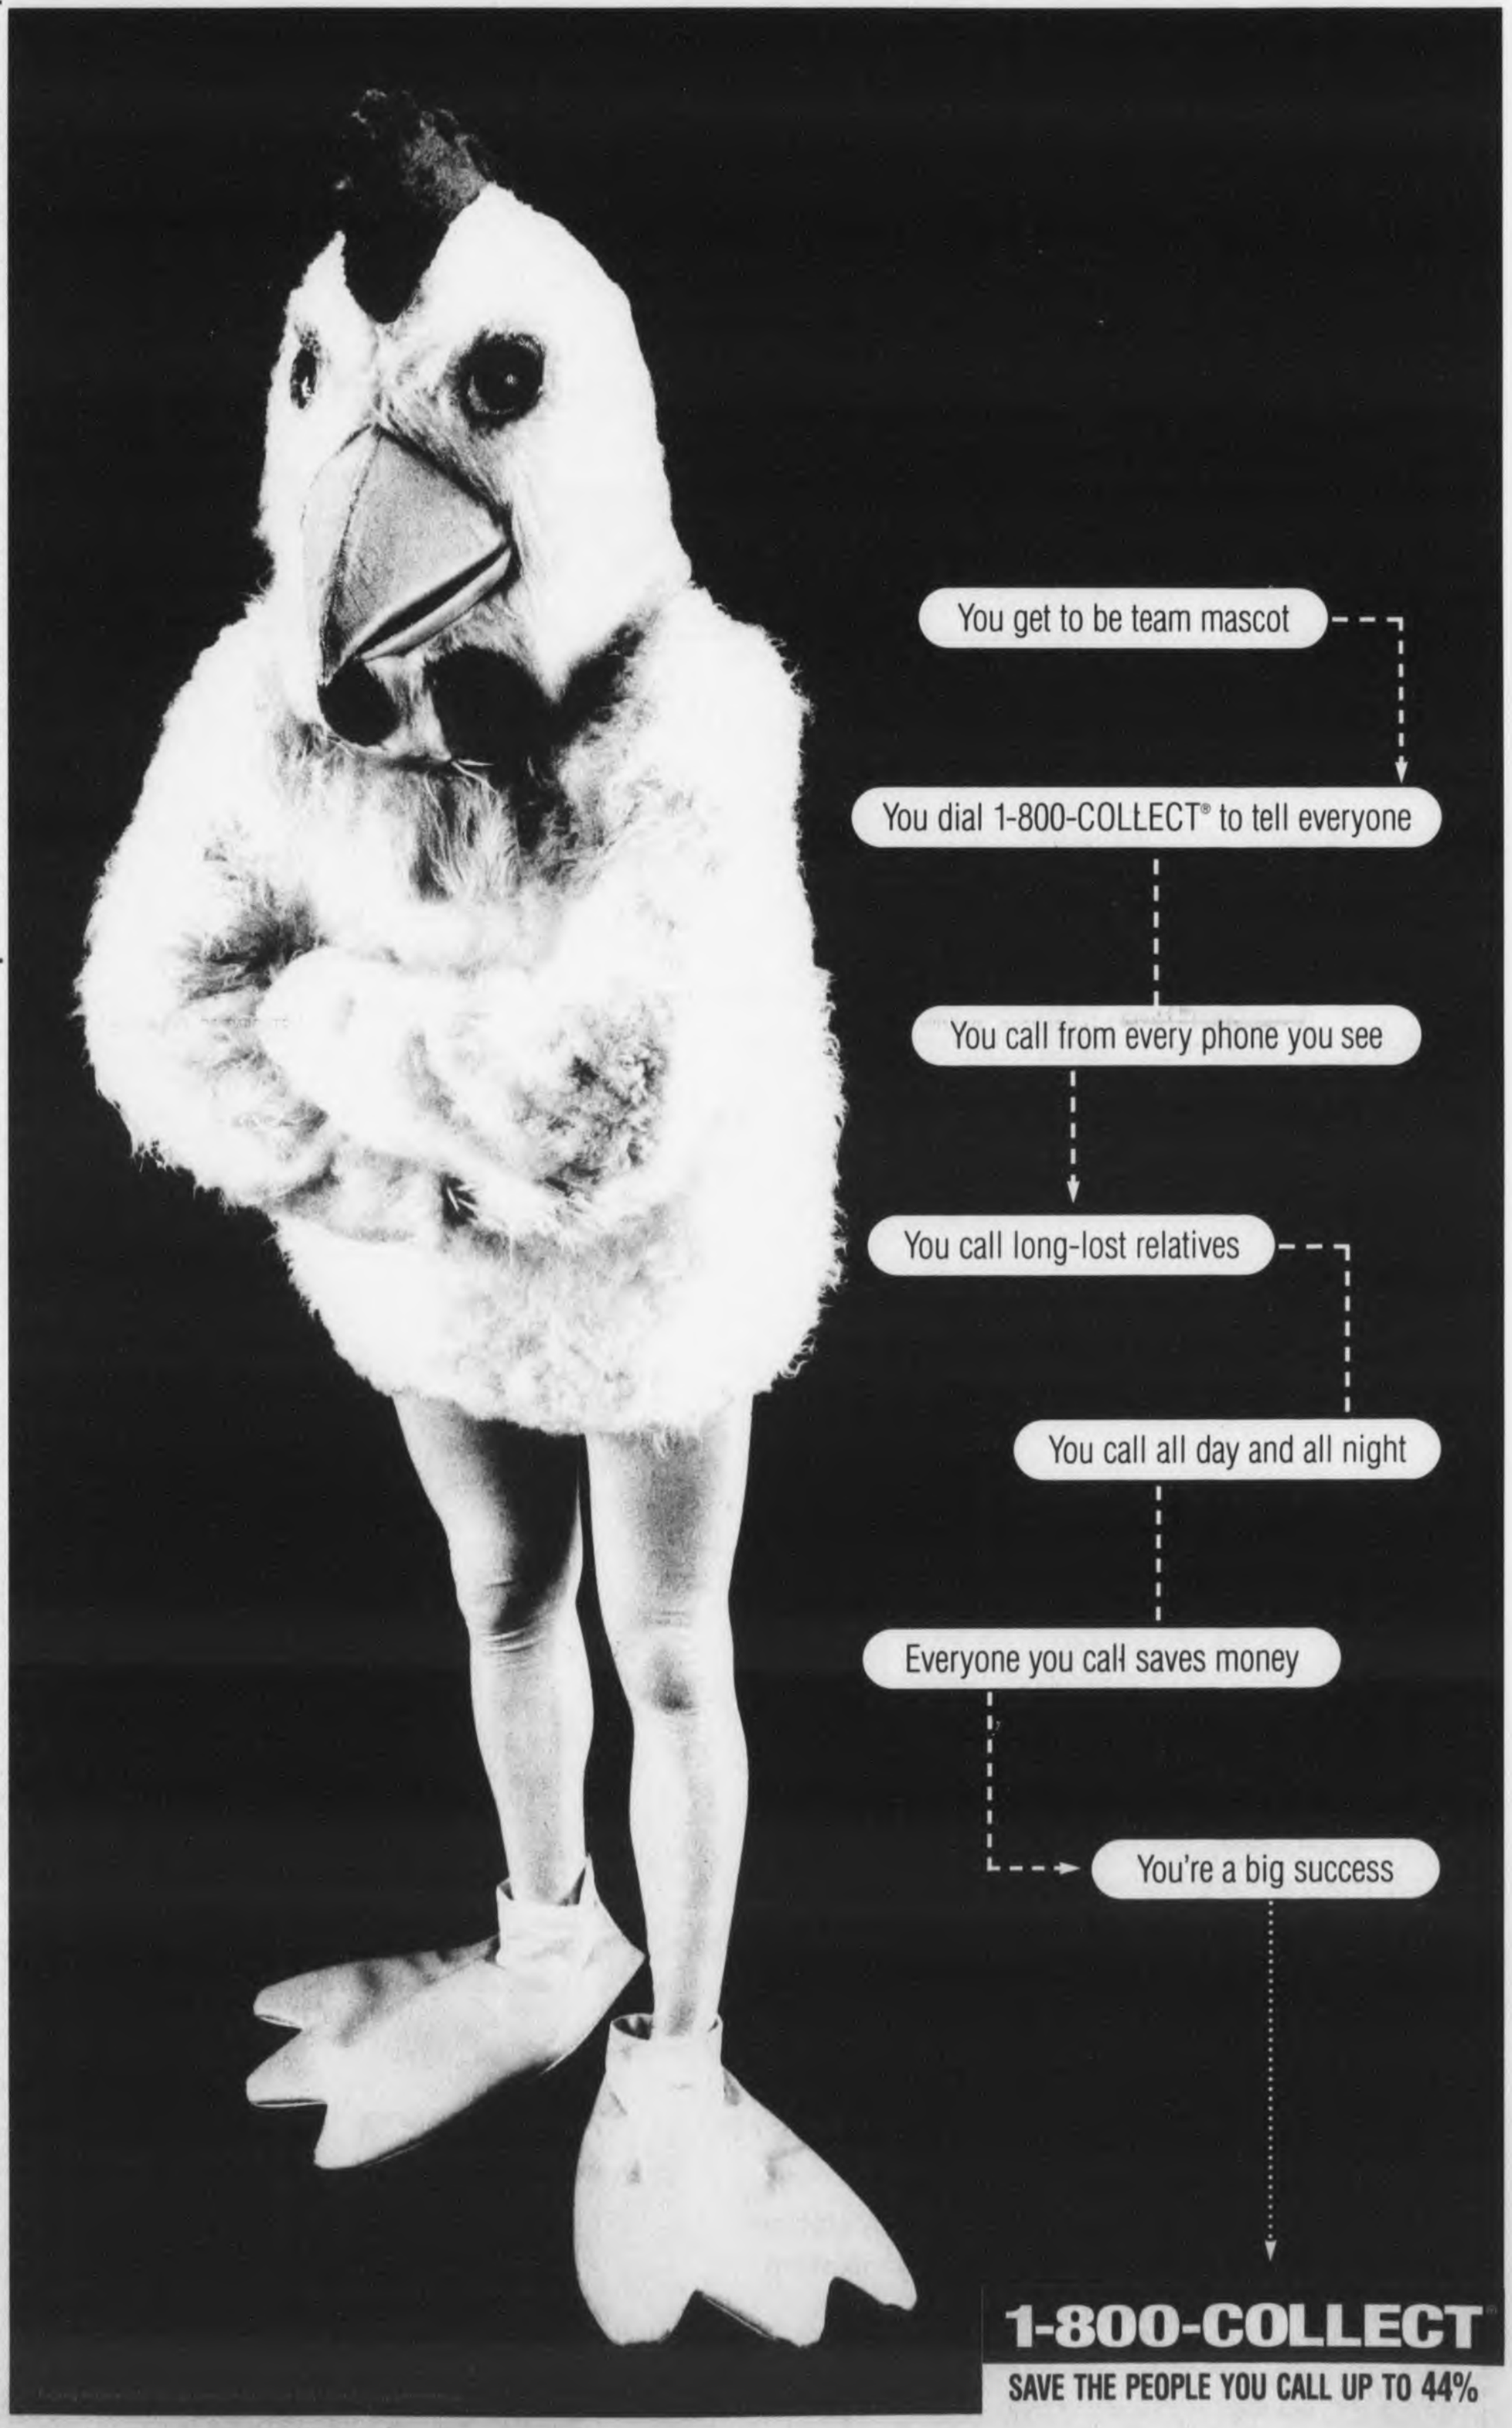
Early on, one former smoker asked Dole if he wanted to retract his statement that nicotine was "not necessarily addictive." Dole said he had been speaking in a technical sense and went on to urge children not to smoke. He then shifted into a litany of statistics about rising use of marijuana and cocaine among teenagers. "It's all happened in this administration," Dole said. "They have been AWOL for 44 months."

When one man asked about the rising costs of Social Security and Medicare, it was Clinton's turn to go on the attack. He recalled Dole's comment last year that he was proud in 1965 to have voted against establishing Medicare. And Clinton said the 1995 Republican budgets pushed by Dole would have raised Medicare premiums $270 a year on elderly Americans who could not afford it.

On Social Security, Clinton suggested a bipartisan commission to recommend steps to keep it solvent — an idea Dole also has endorsed.

Shaking his head, Dole said the nation's governors were responsible for paring welfare rolls, not Clinton. And he said businesses deserved credit for the 10 million new jobs created over the last four years. "The government doesn't create jobs," Dole said.

A young woman asked Dole if his age — 73 — would make it hard for him to understand the concerns of younger Americans.



"I think it is also a strength, an advantage," Dole said of his age, saying it gives him experience, intelligence and wisdom.

Clinton said he wouldn't make Dole's age an issue, but said "it's the age of his ideas I object to." He cited supply-side economics chief among them. "We tried this before," Clinton said.

Dole shot back: "When you don't have any ideas, I guess you say the other person's ideas are old." He evoked Clinton's unfulfilled 1992 campaign promise to cut middle class taxes.

As part of his ethical critique, Dole called on Clinton to rule out pardons for former business associates in Arkansas who have been convicted or are subjects of the so-called Whitewater investigation. "I think the president ought to say tonight he's not going to pardon anybody," Dole said. Clinton did not immediately respond.

Ratings for this year's debates have fallen from 1992. And while the three major broadcast networks were carrying Wednesday's showdown, Clinton and Dole faced stiff competition from Fox and Game 6 of the National League Championship Series between the Atlanta Braves and the St. Louis Cardinals.

Regular vehicle tune-ups necessary

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

An annual visit to a mechanic can mean the difference between a leisurely drive and a two-hour hike.

Money is often tight for college students, and vehicles may suffer as a result. However, yearly vehicle maintenance saves money in the long run, Terry Ekart, of Ekart Automotive Service, said.

"Most people just wait until they have a problem and try to fix everything at once," Ekart said. "That can run into a lot of expense for them."

Cars should have a regular schedule of maintenance, including oil changes and filter checks.

The oil in a car should be changed about every 3,000 miles, depending on the car, Ekart said. Spark plugs should be replaced about every 15,000 to 20,000 miles, again depending on the car.

Ekart recommends students schedule their cars for tune-ups at least once a year. This avoids possible escalation of existing problems. A simple knock can turn into something much more serious if left unchecked.

A regular tune-up costs about $20. The bill may run from $30 to $60 if the car needs any minor repairs, such as replacing belts or hoses, Ekart said. A yearly checkup helps avoid this higher cost.

A car's regular checkup includes inspecting all fluids, such as antifreeze.

It also includes checking the spark plugs, filters, brakes, hoses, belts and lights. A regular tune-up catches trouble before it starts, Ekart said.

Students can inspect their cars themselves as well.

Regularly examining the radiator hoses and belts for wear can avoid unwanted breakdowns, said Mike Conkwright, manager of Bud's Auto Service.

"Also check the fluid levels, brake fluid, washer fluid, power steering, radiator fluid, things like that," Conkwright said.

Conkwright advises students to have the radiator tested before adding more antifreeze. The mechanic can test to see how much antifreeze is needed and if it is needed at all.

It is a good idea to schedule a tune-up before a trip to ensure everything is working properly. A simple problem such as a low tire can quickly deflate a road trip.

Nicole Lingo, junior in apparel and textile marketing, said she makes sure her car is ready for a trip, especially if it is more than 500 miles. She said she was getting a tune-up this weekend.

> EKART AUTOMOTIVE SERVICE

Ekart stressed the importance of a regular maintenance schedule in keeping cars in good running order. He recommends students get their cars in before winter to avoid getting stranded in the cold.

About 70 percent of the problems Ekart sees in his shop are due to lack of general maintenance.

"Get it in before it gets cold, and have a tune-up and oil change," Ekart said.

Professional opera troupe offers 'Barber of Seville'

JASON WALLE
staff reporter

The Western Opera Theater will present Giachino Rossini's comedy "The Barber of Seville" at 8 p.m. tonight in McCain Auditorium.

It is set in Spain during the 18th century. A young nobleman tries to win the love of a young maiden through the assistance of his resourceful barber despite deception, trickery and the plans of her guardian who wants to win her hand in marriage himself.

The Western Opera Theater's touring company is one of two operas in the United States to travel with its own orchestra, and the only professional opera company to tour nationally each year.

In 1994, Western Opera Theater began performing operas in its original language of Italian with the assistance of supertitles, which are English translations projected above the stage.

It makes understanding the story much easier, said Richard Martin, director of McCain.

"Many people at K-State haven't had the opportunity to see a production like this," Martin said. "Hopefully this will allow people to want to see more and find out what is out there."

Several tunes should be familiar to the audience, one song in particular is used in several Bugs Bunny cartoons, Martin said.

"The music is bright and cheerful," he said. "One could actually leave the theater whistling. It's very easy to remember."

NU, K-State orchestras perform

RYAN O'HALLORAN
staff reporter

Orchestras from K-State and the University of Nebraska performed at each other's venues this past week.

The idea was the brain child of David Littrell, who has been the conductor of the K-State orchestra since 1990. Littrell contacted Nebraska conductor Tyler White.

"I wrote him a letter and asked them if they'd be interested in doing something like this," Littrell said.

Nebraska was interested. Last Sunday the 70 members of the K-State orchestra traveled to Lincoln, Neb., and Nebraska's 65-person group came to campus Tuesday night.

"We had a pretty decent crowd here, but they had only 60 people up there," Littrell said.

About 130 people attended the concert in Manhattan.

K-State's program included the works of Liszt, Hindemith, Elgar and Beethoven.

Regents pass admissions changes

CHAD HELIN
staff reporter

The Kansas Board of Regents praised K-State's faculty-evaluation plan Thursday during its meeting in Wichita.

"K-State got out in front on a lot of these issues," Regent Tom Hammond said. "Without them we wouldn't be where we are today."

The time frame of faculty termination defined by the six regents schools was a significant concern of the board.

Four of the schools used a three-out-of-five model, meaning that faculty members could be terminated if they received below-standard evaluations three times in a five-year period.

Emporia State University and the University of Kansas were the exceptions.

KU proposed termination take place if below-standard evaluations came three years in a row, while Emporia State proposed the four-out-of-six plan.

"A six-year period is too long to be effective at a regional school," Regents chair Phyllis Nolan said.

The plans proposed by Wichita State University and Pittsburg State University were not passed because they failed to meet requirements pertaining to faculty development, Regents said.

Faculty development was cited as one of K-State's strong points by the regents because of K-State's comprehensive plan, including a mentoring program, team teaching and funded conferences.

"All of these items are to help improve our faculty," Chris Hansen, student body president, said.

The board passed an amendment to the qualified-admissions proposal that changed natural-science requirements that some in attendance found unacceptable.

In the initial proposal, applied-science classes required a student to take two years to count as one of the three required units. Now, with the amendment, one year will count as one credit.

"This will allow students to take minimal classes," Hansen said. "There's no

Thompson campaigns at K-State

JEREMY KELLEY
staff writer

Sally Thompson, state treasurer and candidate for Nancy Kassebaum's U.S. Senate seat, made an appearance on campus Thursday to take a tour of Farrell Library and do a radio broadcast on KSDB-FM 91.9.

"The library was just incredible," Thompson, a Democrat, said. "This is a great facility to add to the campus."

Thompson said the renovated library would not only improve the appearance of the campus but also help students a great deal.

"It offers a lot for students, and it is very student-friendly," she said.

Thompson said the tour reminded her of the days when she was in a special-interest women's group.

"I wore a hard hat and saw places that most people haven't seen yet," she said.

After the tour of the library, she went to the Little Apple Brewing Co., where she was on "A Purple Affair," a call-in radio program on DB92 designed to help students find out about upcoming election issues.

"This is an opportunity for me to broadcast my views and opinions to students and others who are listening," Thompson said.

During the broadcast, Thompson talked about her main concerns.

"I want to put the Medicare system back on solid ground and protect funding and education," Thompson said.

Jason Dechant, junior in pre-law, conducted the broadcast and asked Thompson to compare her views to those of her Republican opponent, Pat Roberts.

"We both have a different background," she said. "In my time as state treasurer, I proved I can balance a budget. I cut the budget by 4 percent and created $700 million in non-tax revenue."

Dechant said one of the main issues in Kansas was the assault-weapon ban.

"I would never take a sportsman's right to own a gun away, but we need to get those assault weapons out of school and off the streets," Thompson said.

She also said she wanted to preserve financial aid for college students.

"I feel the government should help pay for college students through tax credits," Thompson said. "The government needs to provide loans for students who want to go to college."

Board of Education candidates clash over QPA

ISSUES you want addressed

MATT SPURGIN

Scott Hill, a republican from Abilene, is making his first bid at public office. Eloise Lynch is a former state representative and a Democrat from Salina. Both are running for the State Board of Education.

Both candidates oppose the redesign of teacher licenser, which doesn't require teachers to know every subject they teach.

Licenser would group several classifications of teaching licenses into a larger category. Hill and Lynch both said they think this needs some work or the schools will lose specialization.

"If we were to do that, a person could teach physics or chemistry without having had physics or chemistry," Lynch said.

Lynch supports Quality Performance Accreditation. QPA is a series of qualifications set by the state that schools must meet to be accredited. She said schools need to have accountability for teaching.

Hill is opposed to the concept of QPA's dictating that the school districts will be run similarly.

"I think the people that care the most are concerned the most about education in their community and know the most about what their community needs are," Hill said.

However, he said he does agree with the assessment testing QPA does, and this is what he said voters should concentrate on.

"We need to change from the process of dictating education and move into the realm of measuring the results of education," Hill said.

Hill is against the forced consolidation of school districts. He said he thinks towns die when the schools move away, and small schools are essential to the rural atmosphere of Kansas.

However, he said he supports the decision of districts to consolidate if those districts think it is most efficient for their own district.

Lynch said the state has sovereignty over the school districts, and in some cases, consolidation is necessary.

"Our constitution gives the state the basic responsibility of education," she said.

Lynch would also like to fund public education as a solution to the crime and welfare problem. She said many prison inmates do not have a high-school diploma or an equivalent.

"It kills me to watch people vote without hardly batting an eye, $60-$80 million for a new prison, and we couldn't get a $25 increase on the per capita of the education," Lynch said.

She said by supporting education funding, welfare and crime would decrease.

"I guarantee you it would pay for itself," Lynch said.

Both candidates also support early childhood education.

Hill said he believes early education is good, but it should be up to the parents as to whether children attend preschool and kindergarten classes or where they attend.

Lynch said this type of early schooling should be available, but it should not be mandatory.

"We need accountability to our system that we are actually solving those problems and we aren't just creating another government bureaucracy that uses tax dollars," Hill said.

Biology cheating escapade haunts students, makes instructors wary

MISSY SNODGRASS
staff reporter

Biology became a popular subject in fall 1994, not because of subject matter but because of rampant cheating.

> "The cheating scandal was a problem created by the students."
> • BRIAN SPOONER
> PROFESSOR OF BIOLOGY

More than 100 students were caught and flunked the Principles of Biology course.

Exam answers were leaked when students taking the exam early passed along the answers to others. Brian Spooner, professor and director of the Division of Biology, said there were at least two independent operations working to distribute the answers.

"They were identifiable, because they had the answers that matched the general population," he said.

Spooner said there were several techniques used to discover and detect cheating.

"The cheating scandal was a problem created by the students," Spooner said. "It was instant gratification without looking at long-term consequences, and they do exist."

He was referring to the diminishment of a K-State degree when it is associated to cheating.

Spooner wants students to be responsible and look out for others' cheating. He said students should be in a position where if they know cheating is occurring, they

Professor earns research award

DEBBIE WOOD

A K-State professor recently received an award for research on the leading edge of technology.

Hui Meng, a mechanical engineering professor, was presented the $260,000 Career Award by the National Science Foundation. Meng wrote a proposal titled "New Approaches of Holographic Particle Velocimetry for Studying Turbulence."

Distribution of the grant money began in May and will continue over a five-year period. Meng said the money is a grant to continue her research for expanding her goals and developing a balanced program.

In a press release, Byron Jones, mechanical engineering department head, said this award is highly recognized nationally. The National Science Foundation recognizes the top few prospects in the country who show potential for accomplishment.

Meng

In the two years Meng has been at K-State, she has built a laser flow diagnostics lab from scratch to facilitate her studies of holographic particle image velocimetry.

There are many labs in the world that can do planar PIV, but Meng has developed a way to do three-dimensional, or holographic, PIV. There are only a few labs in the world that can do holographic PIV.

K-State football co-defensive coordinator Mike Stoops pleaded innocent Thursday morning to charges of DUI and transporting an open container.

Stoops was arrested in the early hours of Sept. 8 at a sobriety checkpoint in the 2300 block of Anderson Avenue.

Stoops

Legal representative Ted Smith accompanied Stoops, and a suppression hearing was set for Sept. 19. Trial was set for Dec. 3.

At a suppression hearing, evidence is presented to the judge, who decides what evidence should be considered during trial.

Stoops is in his fifth season with K-State. He was an all-America defensive back for Iowa, played briefly for the Chicago Bears and spent a year in the Arena Football League with the Pittsburgh Gladiators.

• HURRICANE LILI CLOSES IN ON CUBA. Leaving eight people dead in its wake across Central America, Hurricane Lili closed in on Cuba with 80-mph winds Thursday and unloaded rain on already saturated south Florida. The hurricane was expected to cross Cuba early Friday, squeeze through the Florida Straits separating Cuba and Florida, and head for the Bahamas.

• FANS CRUSHED IN SOCCER MATCH. Soccer fans stampeded before a World Cup qualifying match in Guatemala City, crushing and smothering one another in panic in one of the worst sports tragedies in years. At least 83 people — many of them children — were killed and 180 were hurt.

• DEBATE RATINGS LOWEST EVER. The second debate between President Clinton and Bob Dole drew lower ratings than any other presidential faceoff ever televised. Wednesday night's debate captured a 26.1 rating on ABC, CBS, NBC and CNN. That means 25.3-million households were tuned in.

• CALIFORNIA ENFORCES LEMON-LAW. In an unprecedented squeeze on lemon-law violations, California decided Thursday to bar Chrysler Corp. from delivering cars and trucks to the state for 45 days. Chrysler said it would appeal, which could delay the action for years. In announcing the sanction, the department cited 116 violations of California's lemon law, a decade-old statute intended to protect consumers against problem cars.

• KEVORKIAN LEAVES BODY IN HOSPITAL. Dr. Jack Kevorkian helped a woman kill herself and left the body at a hospital Thursday, hours after police confronted the two at a hotel in an apparent attempt to thwart her suicide. Kevorkian dropped off the body at William Beaumont Hospital in Royal Oak, Michigan handing emergency room workers a paper identifying her as Nancy DeSoto, 55, of Bourbonnais, Ill.

• MAN CHARGED WITH DONATING HIV-INFECTED BLOOD. A man accused of knowingly giving HIV-infected blood plasma at a donor center last year has been charged with a felony. Delton Delano Johnson, 31, was held Wednesday at the Boone County Jail on $5,000 bond after an initial court appearance on a charge of risking infection of another with HIV.

• GABON'S EBOLA DEATH TOLL RISES. The Ebola virus has killed a forest worker in Gabon, raising the death toll to 11 in the West African nation's second outbreak of the disease this year. In addition, the World Health Organization said four more people have become infected with the virus in the past two days. All of them have been in close contact with other Ebola patients. The virus is highly contagious, spreading through bodily fluids such as blood and saliva, and even through coughs and sneezes. It kills 80 percent of those infected. In February, an outbreak of the disease in Gabon killed 21 people.

• U.S. BACKS YELTSIN AFTER FIRING LEBED. The United States threw its support behind Russian President Boris Yeltsin in his break with his maverick security chief Thursday, but said it sees no evidence the fired Alexander Lebed actually planned a coup. Perry, in the Russian capital when Yeltsin sacked Lebed, joined other top administration officials in saying the Kremlin power struggle would not alter America's relationship with Russia. Lebed wasted no time Thursday saying he will campaign for the ailing president's job.

• INDICTMENT ACCUSES ESPY OF LYING TO INVESTIGATORS. An indictment against former Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy's lobbyist friend, Richard Douglas, says Espy lied to investigators about his part in obtaining tickets from a large food company. The allegation against Espy, who wasn't charged, was contained in a 19-count indictment against Douglas. The indictment imputes a possible criminal act by Espy because lying to an FBI agent can be criminal offense in some cases. Espy has not been charged in a two-year investigation of his tenure as a member of President Clinton's cabinet. Espy resigned in December 1994.

SPORTS

• POLYNICE ARRESTED. Sacramento Kings center Olden Polynice was arrested at his home on domestic assault charges after his live-in girlfriend complained he yanked keys from her hand and threw her against a wall. The 7-foot Polynice was booked into county jail Wednesday night and released several hours later on bail.

• NMSU BASKETBALL PLAYERS SUSPENDED. Two projected starters for the New Mexico State basketball team were suspended Thursday after pleading guilty to charges of marijuana possession on campus. Enoch Davis and Tobias Lampkin each pleaded guilty.

• CUBS SIGN MCRAE. Center fielder Brian McRae, who was eligible to file for free agency following the World Series, agreed Thursday to an $11.5 million, three-year contract with the Chicago Cubs. McRae gets $3.9 million in 1997, $3.85 million in 1998 and $3.75 million in 1999. He had a $3.4 million base salary last season.

• ROBERTSON CONVICTED OF BURGLARY. Jurors convicted former NBA all-Star Alvin Robertson on Thursday. The trial's punishment phase begins Monday. Robertson, who played five seasons with the Spurs and last season with the Toronto Raptors, could face two to 20 years in prison for burglary with intent to commit theft.

• The story about Lisa Gagnon, Pat Roberts' press secretary, that appeared in Wednesday's Collegian has a few points that need to be clarified. Gagnon was en route to Fort Hays State University as a legislative assistant to discuss the Telecommunications Act of 1996. Gagnon was never employed by Nancy Kassebaum. Additionally, Gagnon does not handle flag and ticket requests and does not deal with constituent services. Finally, Gagnon volunteers in her free time, and does not use legislative time, to work with Roberts' campaign. The Collegian regrets the misunderstanding.

AMY SHAY, senior in health education, teaches aerobics to the 24 attending students. Shay has been teaching aerobics for nearly one year.

Motivation key to aerobics success

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

Basic right. Basic left. Corner knees.

It sounds a little like a drill. In actuality, it is step aerobics.

"Step aerobics is popular because the instructors give people motivation. The music passes time along faster for a lot of people that would not exercise on their own," Robin Quinn, assistant director of Recreational Services, said.

Step aerobics is one of the many aerobics classes offered at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and throughout Manhattan for students and residents.

Men and women of all ages are doing aerobics.

"It is a good cardiovascular workout. I have gotten more coordinated and toned," said Mike Akers, junior in life sciences and Spanish.

Of the 35 aerobic classes offered at the Rec Complex, 15 are step aerobics. Classes are offered throughout the day from 6:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. Two classes are taught during the weekend.

Nautilus Fitness & Aerobic Center in Manhattan offers aerobics every day of the week.

"We offer aerobics and fitness training for K-State students and other people that don't want to go to the Rec because it is crowded, or do not have access to the Rec," Michelle Stirewalt, Nautilus trainer, said.

> "Step aerobics is a fun way to get a cardiovascular workout and tone and build muscle. It also burns fat without people knowing it."
> • AMY SHAY
> JUNIOR IN HEALTH EDUCATION

Stirewalt said Nautilus recommends aerobics three to five times a week. She said doing aerobics four times a week would produce a change in body chemistry.

Rec Complex aerobics instructor Amy Shay, junior in health education, said people get burned out on regular exercise.

"Step aerobics is a fun way to get a cardiovascular workout and tone and build muscle. It also burns fat without people knowing it," Shay said.

Shay said classes are popular this year because of the space and availability of offering so many classes. Shay has been doing aerobics for more than two years.

She attended classes regularly, and when the staff of instructors became short, she was asked to apply.

Quinn said the application process consists of a tryout and interview. Instructors are evaluated every semester.

Shannon Alford, senior in agriculture economics, attends aerobics every day at the Rec Complex.

"It gives me a good, disciplined workout. It is a mindless exercise that fits my schedule," Alford said.

Privilege-fee bill considered by new Senate

NICOLE KIRBY
city/government editor

Student Senate heard the first reading of a bill Thursday that will ensure privilege-fee groups get their allocated fees even if enrollment decreases.

Last year's Senate passed the bill, which allowed for money from the Campus Fee Adjustment to be placed in the Campus Fee Reserves Account to ensure allocations.

"If for some reason we should foresee that there would be a decrease in enrollment, we could put money in the reserves account to ensure that they receive the set amount and, in effect, fight the fire before it happens," Jake Breeding, Privilege Fee Committee chair, said.

Thursday night's bill would set funding regulations, including allowing unforeseen budget adjustments and one-time budget enhancements instead of full budget increases.

> "... we could put money in the reserves account to sensure that they receive the set amount ... ."
> • JAKE BREEDING
> PRIVILEGE FEE COMMITTEE CHAIR

Groups that have previously asked for budget increases and adjustments could not ask for increases, because they do not qualify as unforeseen.

Another bill proposed funding guidelines for the Educational Opportunity Fund for fiscal year 1998.

It proposed a maximum of nine $500 scholarships be funded, college and department group scholarships not be funded and childships for child-care facilities not be funded.

It also proposed a maximum of $6,750 be paid to graduate assistants for each nine-month term.

All groups affected were notified, according to the bill's text.

If they contest the amounts and submit clarifications of their proposals before next week's meeting, these will be considered for the second reading of the bill.

The Senate unanimously passed an amendment to the Student Government Association constitution.

The bill changed the way the parliamentarian was selected. Senate's approval is necessary for appointment of the parliamentarian.

"Basically, this was brought up because there was so much problem about choosing the parliamentarian," Michelle Ecklund, arts and sciences senator, said of the dispute about the rules when Patrick Carney was appointed parliamentarian.

"All appointments should be approved by Student Senate," she said.

Senate approved the appointment of two new senators, who replaced two senators that had resigned.

Jason Ross, new engineering senator, and Dave Hasemann, new graduate senator, were runners-up in the elections in April.

OPINION

EDITOR: SERA TANK 532-0730 (KAROLYI@KSU.EDU) FRIDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1996 PAGE 4

IN OUR OPINION

Stricter admission standards means students better prepared

The Kansas Board of Regents has just made education more valuable.

By passing qualified admissions, the regents have put standards on being admitted to a regents university.

The admission standards will not go into effect until 2001. Seniors graduating that year will have to be in the top one-third of their class, score a 21 on the American College Testing program or achieve a 2.0 grade point average and complete a precollege curriculum.

WHY WE CARE

Qualified admissions is a positive step for the regents universities. It will help improve the education of the students.

Really, the standards are broad and very few people will be eliminated.

Those who are eliminated are not excluded from higher education.

They can work on their education at a community or private college. After they have gained the skills they need to attend a regents institute, they can transfer.

Only a very small percentage of students attending K-State currently did not meet these standards when they graduated from high school, so this bill is basically full of token requirements.

But it is a step toward the future for the education here.

Eventually, the standards will become stricter, and the quality of education and the students will improve.

Qualified admissions hopefully will allow teachers to teach to students on the same academic level instead of reviewing remedial material for a few, while the rest of the class loses time, money and vital information.

The students who are admitted to K-State hopefully will be better prepared to handle college.

There will be fewer instances of students dropping out or flunking out due to the fact that they just weren't ready for college.

On the same note, because there will be fewer people dropping out, there will also be less money spent on student loans and grants for people who weren't ready to be here.

While there are definite flaws, we feel that the qualified admission requirements are broad enough to allow those who truly want an education to get one.

But they are also strict enough to improve the quality of education in the regents institutes.

Cases of gimme complex reach epidemic numbers as election nears

MY

Jeremy STEPHENS

As the elections lurk ever closer, a strange phenomenon seems to be spreading across America. It appears to afflict politicians and reasonable people alike.

While it appears to be highly contagious, do not fear. It is treatable. Symptoms range from an acute belief that the system pays for itself to insisting that llama wool subsidies are necessary to protect vital national security interests.

It's the gimme complex, and it appears to be on the rise.

The gimme complex has produced various consequences. In the past it has produced so-called pork, but the more contemporary term is economic stimulus package.

Politicians with this complex will often state, and may even believe in a romantic sort of way, that they are doing some sort of good by securing the delivery of funds through an end-all program.

> "Acting in the special interest only serves to better the situation of a few people, while worsening the situation of the general population."

Unfortunately, that politician usually has not taken the time or energy to meet those who really need help and doesn't care to, unless it happens to be an election year.

A reasonable person who has signs of this malady will tend to believe politicians when they say a certain program, which is supposed to help someone neither the politician nor the reasonable person has met, is doing that unidentified someone some good.

This affliction is especially strong when the person who appears to be receiving help is the reasonable person himself.

In fact, the reason I noticed this at all was because I saw an advertisement in a newspaper a few days ago.

In it, a local politician running for state office stated that she helped get $18 million in state money for Farrell Library and another $32 million for repairs and new construction at K-State.

When I first saw the ad, I must admit I was impressed.

If I were a permanent resident of Manhattan, I would have cast my vote for her because it looked like she was getting things done.

However, what struck me was the use of the word get.

It was as if to say that as the politicians were doling out state funds in Topeka, she was so concerned about her district that she reached in the pot and pulled out $50 million in taxes that I helped pay for. Furthermore, it was as if I should be thankful she got up the courage to do it.

To be honest, that made me mad. I had never met her, yet I was supposed to feel indebted to her. I didn't. I was repulsed.

But that's just one example. Dozens more could be listed, such as Democrat and Republican, Senate and House, Federal and state, and monuments and bridal registries.

The problem with this kind of activity is it is not in the general interest of the people.

Granted, some in academia or government could produce a small mountain of paperwork to show that somewhere in the future I'll eventually be glad that a politician tipped her hand to a special interest.

Acting in the special interest only serves to better the situation of a few people, while worsening the situation of the general population.

The sad thing is that those who insist on tipping their hand to the special interest have learned they can count on that special interest to help get them elected. In addition, those in the special interest find that to keep getting special attention, they need to work to get the politician elected.

While this is great for the politician and the special interest, those who are not connected with either group must subsidize the decisions of these kinds of politicians.

Part of the reason for this is that it is easier to point to a special interest than a general interest. That is, for those of us who are K-State students, it is easy to see a sidewalk that needs to be repaired and easy to notice when it is done.

However, someone hundreds of miles away from here helped pay for it.

In turn, you help pay for the results of the political skills of someone you have never met.

Special interests. Just say no.

Running on empty

Sleepless nights are painful but required memories for students

MY

Rhett HARTMAN

The more you dedicate yourself to this rat race we call college, the less sleep you will get. The sooner you learn this lesson, the sooner you will sleep better.

Included in this lesson is the fact that when you sacrifice sleep for class, your body starts to take over. It says, "I don't know what you're trying to do to me, but whether you like it or not, I'm getting tired."

This is when your body and mind compromise. If your mind can convince your body what it needs to do is important enough, your body will cooperate.

Take driving, for example. Two years ago I drove to Lawrence and made it there by midnight.

The plan was to find some friends and camp out until the next morning. I got stuck on the finding part.

After I got lost numerous times on the backroads of Clinton Lake, and after pushing my fuel needle farther left than I would have liked it, I finally gave up and decided to drive home.

I stopped by a gas station at about 2:30 a.m. Saturday. I couldn't tell you exactly how, but somehow I made it back to Kansas Highway 177 about 4 a.m. All I remember is trying to stay awake by screaming the Eurythmics' "Sweet Dreams" at the top of my lungs.

This was an exercise in sleep deprivation. I'm lucky to be alive.

Yet this is not unfamiliar territory for many college students. Writing papers, finishing drawings and models, completing projects — these all are culprits for staying up far too late than is healthy.

The pressures and responsibilities you place on yourself ensures that the allotted 24 hours in a day is not enough. Who decided that, anyway? And why is the weekend only two days long? There will never be enough time.

Sleep is sacred. But people in college treat it as an expendable thing. "Can't study while I'm sleeping" is the rational excuse. This is your mind talking, trying to convince your body to stay up.

The paradoxical thing is, your body should have just as much say in what you do, because it is just as involved in learning and thinking.

Logic does tell us that you can't study when you sleep, but if you forego your body's desire, how productive can you be? After you wake up from a full night's sleep, more energy and focus is given to your minutes, and ideas and synapses are alive.

Better sleeping habits also include going to bed and waking up at a regular time every day, so your body can know what to expect and develop a rhythm.

Because you fall asleep slowly, you should wake up slowly. What do dogs and cats do when they wake up? Stretch. Doing this will help you wake up, too.

Before you go to bed, plan your next day's responsibilities. This will give you motivation to wake up in the morning.

Exercising during the day will make it easier to fall asleep and let you sleep deeper.

I heard on the radio that people will naturally sleep 9 to 10 hours a night. Naturally means they have no projects due, tests to take or deadlines to meet. Their mind and body are not worrying about what they haven't finished or need to finish.

Once I tried sleeping in when I shouldn't have, not exactly on purpose. I must say I am convinced.

I had a project due at 1 p.m. that I estimated would have taken me around three hours to complete. That morning, I slept in until 11. I might have been behind, but I had a rested body and mind on my side.

In 50 minutes I cranked out a paper that would have taken me at least three or four hours. But I was ready and motivated to get this thing finished.

With all the rest I got, I focused better than normal, I was more creative and able to think of the answer. Fatigue and stress were not pulling me down. It was a beautiful thing.

Not getting enough sleep is ugly. A friend of mine described it as not running on all cylinders. Try taking a test when you haven't slept. It's like a never-ending beating on the head.

In Spain, the accepted norm is a midday nap called a siesta. This is when society shuts down for a few hours while people nap.

This isn't a law or anything, either. People just do it. Can you imagine this? Yet in college the focus is on getting the job done and not necessarily treating your body well.

As I'm writing this my eyelids are bloated. And because I have a test tomorrow, I'm going to give in to my body and forget about the pressures.

Take my hand, won't you, and together we can cross the ocean of dreams.

> "Sleep is sacred. But people in college treat it as an expendable thing."

Museum's appearance lacking

Editor,

I'm writing in support of Russell Fortmeyer's column about the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, which appeared in the Oct. 16 Collegian.

I had been wondering if and when someone might actually say something negative about the appearance of the building.

To the rural inhabitants of this part of Kansas, I'm afraid our art museum probably looks like an over-glorified, yet unfinished barn, or adjoining sets of barns, if you like.

I sincerely doubt visitors will be savvy enough to appreciate any architectural or decorative purpose in having bare concrete walls adorn the upper exterior walls, while there are limestone bricks around the base. Had I not known otherwise, I would have the impression that the budget fell short to finish the work.

I also worry that the bare walls are an open invitation to graffiti artists to come make their mark on the University.

I hate to be so negative, but I do walk by this building on my way to work every day, and have seen this building slowly take its form to the so-called finished state. I know it's probably too late to change it, but one idea might be to do a mural of K-State or Kansas scenes around the building.

Meat's not the only food critters have to die for so we can eat

Editor,

I would like to write a response to Page Getz's veggie column.

I have never written in before, and I can't believe this column is the one that prompted me to do so. Maybe it is because I'm so sick with the crud-bug that's going around that I've lost all sense and inhibitions.

First of all, I totally agree that a vegetarian has every right to eat as such. I also applaud Troy Hock's perspective that if you don't think you could kill it yourself you shouldn't eat it.

For example, I could not kill a person, kitten or a calf that had been kept on a liquid diet and restrained to a dark stall to enhance tenderness, which is known as veal. As a result, I do not eat these meaty substances.

In fact, when my cousin became a vegetarian recently, our whole family thought about what we ate and why. However, there are some things that simply cannot be avoided.

For example, when you bite into a nice, juicy cherry tomato, did you realize it was alive?

All those little tomato cells swishing around in your mouth are living. Also, those little seeds, if planted, could grow into a new plant. Also, what about the fertilizer used by farmers to grow those tasty veggies?

Getz said a dilemma she had run into was cheese containing an enzyme from a calf stomach. OK, fine, but fertilizer comes from other things extracted from critters. Not just the obvious either, but sometimes bones from slaughtered animals are ground into the mix.

Also, many bugs are killed with pesticides just so humans can have premium fruit. Who is standing up for the bugs? Who, vegetarian or not, has squashed some poor little female mosquito who bites to get nourishment for her eggs? If we look on her as Da Vinci did on animals, we have just committed murder. The same theory applies to the insects plastered on our windshields.

What about water? Who on campus has never sipped purified water? Did they know that all the little water critters were killed just so a human could drink, water a lawn or flush a toilet?

And if the water was unpurified, never having been through a treatment plant, when people drank it, all those poor little water bugs and critters would just get killed by their gastric juices anyway. Sort of a catch 22 isn't it?

As a final thought, how about premature babies who have benefited from extractions from slaughter-house cows that have enabled them to breathe without their lungs collapsing each time? Before this use of animals, I believe it was only cadavers that were used, and not many children were helped.

I believe my information is accurate and fair in reasoning. In fact, this is pretty much the same reasoning I went through when considering becoming a vegetarian.

My conclusion was that I shall eat meat if I want to. But, I prefer the main meat of our culture: beef, pork, fish and chicken. This is because they do not die solely to feed people, but many of their parts, as pointed out in Getz's column, are used for other things.

The real crime to me would be if I felt their lives were a waste. Like all the many pounds of sea life destroyed, I believe it is 50, just to get 1 pound of shrimp. To me, this is a waste of life, and I protest by refraining.

Thank you for your time, and I hope this shed a bit more light on things.

Age of average college student rising

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The number of American college students older than 40 has more than tripled during the past two decades, rising from 477,000 in 1970 to 1.6 million in 1993, according to a new study.

People older than 40 made up 36 percent of the U.S. population in 1970 but 40 percent in 1995, according to the study released Wednesday, which relied on U.S. Census figures.

"By sheer numbers, the baby boomers are revolutionizing our educational worlds, as they've been doing all along," said Ted Freeman, president of the Education Resources Institute, which co-sponsored the study.

But demographic shifts cannot explain the entire boom in older students, said Jamie Merisotis, president of the Institute for Higher Education Policy, the other co-sponsor.

"People over the age of 40 are going back to college to be retrained," he said. "Life-long learning is becoming a reality for Americans."

Two-thirds of the older students are women, and some have returned to school after a divorce or after their children get older, giving them time to develop a career, he said.

Others are just looking for a career change or are trying to keep up with an increasingly competitive marketplace.

Celebrating 80 years

Alumnae, actives attend anniversary banquet, Founder's Day brunch to reflect on past events

HEATHER HJETLAND

Iris flags are flying from 517 Fairchild Terrace. Women are dressing up and wearing pins and ribbons.

The Kappa Kappa Gammas are celebrating.

This year the K-State Gamma Alpha chapter is 80 years old.

Members have been celebrating with Heritage Week since Monday, building up to their annual Founder's Day banquet. This weekend they will have an 80-year anniversary reunion and celebration in conjunction with the annual day.

Cherlyn White, junior in human development and life span and who helped coordinate the events, said 500-600 alumnae will attend. Two alumnae attending were members in the 1920s.

"I'm looking forward to seeing old friends and meeting the new members," said Jenny DeBolt Hechler, a 1995 graduate who lives in Kansas City, Kan.

Saturday, alumnae will tour the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. That night, a banquet and dance will be at the Holiday Inn & Holidome. The guest speaker will be Laura Scott, a 1966 graduate and assistant editorial-page editor of the Kansas City Star.

The current members will have a separate formal at the Wareham Opera House.

Sunday, the alumnae and active Kappas will attend the Founder's Day brunch. Laura Lyon Shoffner, a 1955 graduate and Harlequin romance novelist will speak. The banquet will also consist of special Kappa ceremonies and rituals.

"It's really exciting that these women who have been in the house will be together to share Kappa," Nicole Veatch, junior in human development and family studies, said about the banquet.

For Heritage Week, the Kappas have been reflecting on the past, where the future is going and changes in the house, White said.

Bethany Wolken, junior in industrial engineering, said she is excited to talk with alumnae to see what things have changed in greek life and what they did when they lived in the house.

One special event at the banquet is the awarding of keys to members who act for the good of the house. Keys are given to the chapter in honor of Kappa alumnae who made an outstanding contribution to the sorority while being active members.

The keys are passed down each year to members who exemplify qualities such as democracy and friendship and who are recognized as most inspiring.

Also at the banquet, a quilt with a fleur-de-lis on it will be raffled.

The Kappas will kick off a fundraiser to make improvements and additions to the house. Final plans will be unveiled this weekend.

Kappa Kappa Gamma facts:

- Its colors, light and dark blue, symbolize the sky and sea.
- The symbols are the key, which is a tool that opens and reveals, and the owl for wisdom.
- The flower is the mystical fleur-de-lis, and an iris is used when live flowers are needed.
- In 1918, the K-State chapter purchased its house from a former president of the University.
- They were the first women's sorority to publish a magazine and establish a central office and headquarters.
- There are 125 chapters nationwide and in Canada.
- Its 125-year anniversary was celebrated last year.
- Candice Bergen, star of Murphy Brown, was a member.

Wildcats head to Aggieland

SHANE MCCORMICK
contributing writer

Connell

K-State, 5-1, 2-1, will be taking to the road for the second straight week as it travels to College Station, Texas, to take on Texas A&M, 3-3, 1-1.

The Cats will try to build on momentum from a 35-10 victory over Missouri last Saturday.

But this will be no ordinary road trip for the Cats. A&M's Kyle Field has its own unusual atmosphere that promises to make things difficult for the Cats.

"To date, this is our toughest road game of the year," Coach Bill Snyder said. "I've never been there. I've heard from coaches and players that it can get pretty loud there."

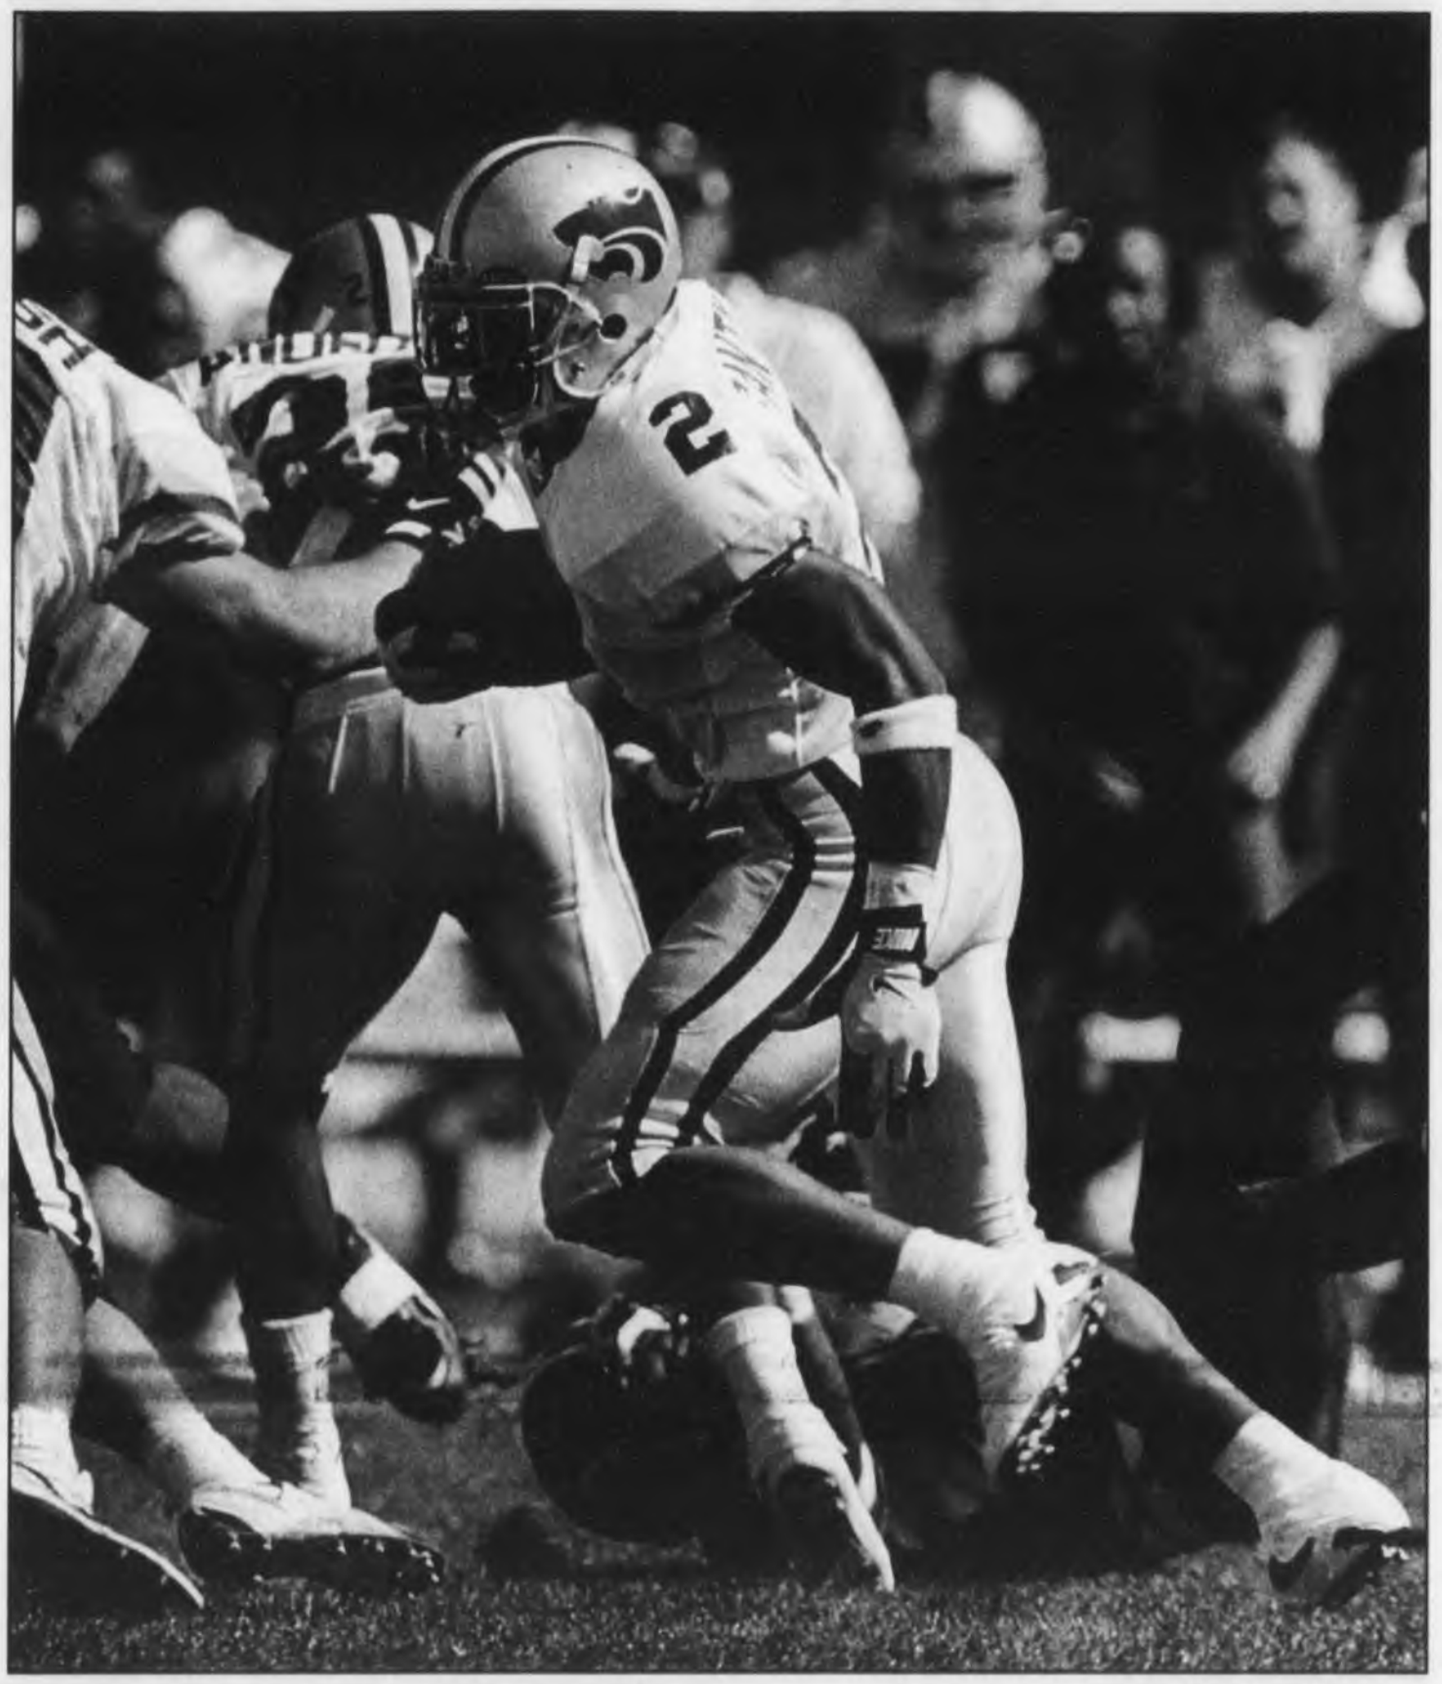
But battling noise created by the 70,000-plus fans won't be the only concern for the Cats at Kyle Field.

The Aggies have one of the top offenses and one of the top defenses in the nation. The Aggies are currently ranked seventh in the nation in total offense, averaging 481.3 yards a game.

"They have great speed and talent," Snyder said. "They really have a balanced offense. Their run-pass attack is very balanced."

GAME

▶ Saturday's kickoff has changed to 6 p.m. so that the game can be televised on Fox Sports Net. It will also be broadcast on the Wildcat Sports Network.



A big talent for the Aggies on the offensive side of the ball is senior wideout Albert Connell. Connell sits at the top of the Big 12 in receptions and receiving yards. Against Iowa State last week, Connell hauled in four catches for 91 yards, including a 70-yard touchdown catch.

"He's consistent and exciting. We haven't had a guy like that here in a long, long time," Aggie coach R.C. Slocum said. "If you get the ball to him, he has a chance to make something happen."

On the defensive side of the ball, the Aggies have been tough against the run.

They are led by Keith Mitchell and Brandon Mitchell. Against Iowa State and Troy Davis last week, the duo combined for 18 total stops and five tackles behind the line of scrimmage.

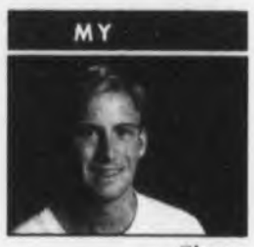
"You try not to be any different, even as good as they are against the run," Snyder said. "You still have to go out there and try to establish the run. You have to try and create some balance in your offense."

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

K-STATE CORNERBACK Chris Canty returns a punt last Saturday in K-State's 35-10 victory over the Tigers. While the special teams will play an important role in Saturday's contest against Texas A&M at College Station, Texas, the Wildcats' ability to break apart the Aggie's balanced two-part offense will be the key. Canty will most likely cover A&M's Albert Connell Saturday in one-on-one coverage.

Fans should give Irvin 2nd chance; Cowboys need receiver's talent

Usually, my Sundays consist of turning the television on at noon and watching football until 11 p.m. But last Sunday, I had the opportunity to travel down to Irving, Texas, to see a game in person.



I got to see the Dallas Cowboys take on the Arizona Cardinals.

But the actual game was just a sideshow on this particular day. The highlight of the day wasn't whether the boys would win. Rather, it was the 1996 debut of Michael Irvin.

It was the first time Irvin had stepped on the playing field since Super Bowl XXX, returning after a five-game drug suspension.

The wide receiver has been a consistent mainstay for the Cowboys over the years. Irvin has been one of the main three components of the Cowboys' offense, along with Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith. In the past four years, Dallas has had a .823 winning percentage when the three have played. That figure drops to .416 when one of them does not play.

MY

Shane
MCCORMICK

This year, without Irvin, the Cowboys have struggled to a 2-3 record. It was obvious they needed his services back. They wanted him back.

But did the fans want him back? How would he be received when he came out of that tunnel? These were the real questions of the day.

Making my way up to my seats in the stadium, I noticed two fans walking my way. Both of them were wearing Michael Irvin jerseys. But on both of them, big red X's were marked through the No. 88. They made a statement.

As the announcer started introducing the Cowboys' offensive starters, I could see Irvin was at the back. He would be one of the last introduced.

As the announcer introduced Irvin, cheers came from the Cowboys faithful. But there were also plenty of boos, enough to be heard over the cheers.

After the game was finished, the Cowboys postgame show was filled with callers expressing their opinions about the fans response. Most were glad to see the fans boo Irvin.

Boo the guy you really need back on the field?

Come on, people.

I'm the first to admit Irvin made a mistake. What he did was wrong, and he paid for it. He served his suspension. He's doing the community hours.

He made a mistake, but give the guy his second chance. He is needed on that team now more than ever. The Cowboys had been struggling all year. They have had no confidence.

Irvin does two things for the team. First, he brings stability back to the offense. All year, Aikman has been struggling to find a receiver he could go to consistently on third downs. Irvin was that person in the past.

> "He made a mistake, but give the guy his second chance. He is needed on that team now more than ever."

Everyone around the Cowboys organization knows this.

"Anytime a quarterback and a wide receiver have been together as long as they have, there is a common trust in knowing what the other guy will do," offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese said.

"In terms of having total confidence, Michael's coming back will help Troy," he said.

But maybe more importantly, Irvin provides an emotional spark for the Cowboys.

Irvin is always there to provide the Cowboys with a lift when it is needed. He gets the team pumped up during practices and games. He is the emotional leader of this team. He raises the Cowboys' level of play.

Irvin is definitely no role model for anyone, but I have never pictured him as one. He has always been a cocky, arrogant person. That is good on the field, but not off the field.

It will be interesting to see if the fans respond differently next week, when the Cowboys take on the Falcons. Irvin will definitely have to earn the fans' respect back. My bet is the fans will take him back with open arms as soon as he produces a 100-yard, two-touchdown day.

Irvin will make this team better, I have no doubt about that. So the question is this:

Will Irvin be able to lead this team to a Super Bowl win and a trip to the real White House, not the one he got caught in?

▶ CROSS COUNTRY

K-State takes show on road at Michigan

■ Toughest race this season faces Wildcats.

JEREMY KELLEY
sports writer

The K-State cross country teams travel to the University of Michigan this weekend for the Wolverine Interregional Invitational.

"I think we are as ready as we could possibly be for this tournament," Coach Terry Drake said.

Both men's and women's teams are traveling this weekend in a tournament that is dominated by nationally ranked teams including Georgetown, Michigan, North Carolina State and Tennessee.

"This might be one of the tougher tournaments of the year so far, as far as level of competition goes," Drake said.

The women's team obtained a No. 20 national ranking earlier this month, but due to a poor performance in Stillwater, Okla., last week, it fell out of the top 25.

Drake said all his runners except for Kathryn Wolfram, who has some tenderness in her hip, were healthy and looked for them to compete well in the tournament. However, Anita Hallauer is out with mononucleosis and will not make the trip.

Wolfram sustained a hip injury about a month ago at a tournament and has been out of practice for about a month.

"Kathryn practiced really well these last couple of days," Drake said. "We are going to take her and let her run just to give her the experience."

Valerie Spencer was also declared eligible this week, so she will also run in Michigan.

"We hope to go up there and compete very well. Plus, we've got two new girls back," Drake said.

83 killed at World Cup soccer match

ASSOCIATED PRESS

GUATEMALA CITY — Fans trying to squeeze into a soccer stadium stampeded at a World Cup qualifying match Wednesday. Guatemalan officials said at least 83 people were trampled or suffocated to death, and about 180 were injured.

The bodies of mostly young soccer fans were lined up in a long row stretching far across the Mateo Flores National Stadium after the match was suspended. Firefighters and police cut through a chain-link fence to lower the victims from the grandstands.

People still in the stands clung to the fence, describing to black-helmeted firefighters the clothing and hair color of friends and relatives who had vanished in the mayhem.

The cordon of corpses on the stadium track with their arms crossed across their chests included men in blue jeans and T-shirts boasting their country's team, a woman in Indian dress and a child, nose bloodied and head cocked. At least 15 children were among the dead.

Some bodies had clothes torn off them, and firefighters covered them with coats and blankets in the glare of the stadium lights.

"It's terrible! It's terrible!" said Marlon Ivan Leon, a defender for the Guatemalan team, who stood crying on the field.

Costa Rican soccer players hugged in a tight circle on the field.

"What does soccer matter now?" said Guatemala's head coach, Horacio Cordero.

The tragedy occurred about an hour before a qualifying match between the Guatemalan and Costa Rican national teams. More than 45,000 people, including the presidents of the two countries, packed the stands beyond capacity.

Too many tickets apparently were sold for the match.

ISU, MU looking for 1st Big 12 wins

JOHN BERGGREN
sports writer

The 16-3 K-State volleyball team has been yearning to play at home all season. This weekend will mark only the fifth and sixth days the team has been at home.

The No. 25-ranked Wildcats should have an easy time against Iowa State at 7 tonight and Missouri at 7 Saturday night. Both opponents have yet to pick up a Big 12 win.

Iowa State is only 4-14 overall, 0-6 in the Big 12. Missouri is winless at 0-14 overall, 0-3 in Big 12 play.

Coach Jim Moore said if the team wants to finish the season on a good note, it must win these matches.

"These should be games that we can win while thinking about other things," he said.

"We can't play poorly, but we shouldn't have to spend a lot of time preparing for them.

"If we can't beat teams in this situation, we won't be able to compete for the Big 12 title, and we won't make it very far in the tournament."

Moore said he is hoping to be able to work more of the team's non-starters into the lineup this weekend.

"Even the players said this week that we have to get more people comfortable about coming in and playing," Moore said.

"The only way to get people confidence is to get them in the middle of the match."

K-State is hoping to keep packing the fans into Ahearn Field House. The Cats are 14th in the nation in average attendance at home games through Oct. 6, drawing 7,742 fans to its first six matches.

"I made the statement when I came here, 'If Lincoln can do it, Manhattan can do it,'" Moore said. "Nobody wants to come out and watch a team that's pathetic, so if we're successful, people will come. I think we're starting to get a following now."

KU's defense struggling to squelch opponents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Rumors that the KU defensive line has disappeared are rampant, and allowing Texas Tech to score 23 unanswered points in the second half of the Jayhawks' 30-17 loss last Saturday did nothing to squash them.

But coaches and players alike aren't worried.

"We played better defensively than the score indicated," said Coach Glen Mason.

Texas Tech shredded the Kansas defense for 381 total yards, including 190 by running back Byron Hanspard. The Jayhawks did stop Hanspard's streak of 200-plus games at four.

"We came out and did a good job against Hanspard," said senior defensive tackle Kevin Kopp. "We felt as a defense we had to come together and play a complete game and go out and shut down their running game."

Controlling the running game was the defensive focus against Texas Tech, which came into the game ranked just behind Nebraska in rushing offense.

The defense also controlled the big play, victimizing KU in its 45-42 loss to Utah three weeks ago. The Hawks gave up a record 576 yards of total offense to the Utes.

Saturday's game matches KU's defense against another powerful offense, that of No. 8 Colorado. In addition, the Buffaloes could be out for revenge for last year's 40-24 loss to KU in Boulder.

Hanspard is the best back the Jayhawks have faced this year. But Colorado's offense may be more powerful than Texas Tech's.

The players on the defensive line look forward to showing they're the force they were projected to be at the beginning of the season.

"We're working on a lot of things," said Ward. "I think we're definitely improving."

Students tap into cellular lifesyle

■ Cell phones gain popularity as their affordability increases.

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

While you are driving down the highway at 2 a.m., the thumping of a flat tire echoes throughout the car.

No problem.

You pick up the cellular phone and call for help.

In this age of advanced technology, some college students can afford cellular phones and avoid harmful situations.

Many students drive several hours just to go home for a weekend.

The most common reason college students buy cellular phones is that their parents want them to be prepared in case of an emergency, said Cory Town, account executive for Cellular One.

"I got my phone for a Christmas present, because I have to drive a long way home," Shari Frazier, senior in business, said.

"I let my boyfriend use it whenever he goes somewhere," Frazier said.

Students traveling through hilly terrain or rural areas should invest in a three-watt bag phone with a power supply, Jim Lynn, account executive for Kansas Cellular, said.

The bag phone has maximum-power strength and costs about $55.

Calling home and paying long-distance charges can be eliminated by using a cellular phone, Lynn said.

"I have a service where I can call home for free," Frazier said.

Cellular phone companies offer a variety of services.

Once students determine the main use for the phone, they should choose an appropriate service.

Kansas Cellular offers a service so that when a prefix is chosen from students' hometown, any calls they make home or calls from home are considered local calls.

No one gets charged long-distance fees.

The phone owner should choose a prefix from where the most people will be calling, Lynn said.

The prefix of the phone and the actual location of the phone are called calling scopes. Up to six calling scopes may be used for $1.50 each, Lynn said.

Kansas Cellular offers another service in which nights and weekends are free.

This service comes with 1,000 free minutes of air time per month. There is a set fee of $9.95 a month. Any call from 9 p.m. to 7 a.m. on weekdays or 9 p.m. Friday to 7 a.m. Monday is always free.

Calls at other times are also free until the 1,000 free minutes run out. Once the free minutes run out, there is a charge of 3 cents per minute, Lynn said.

Cellular One offers a basic plan of 100 minutes free air time and a first free incoming minute for $36.99 a month. They also offer a starter plan with 80 minutes free air time for $29.99.

Users will typically spend more in a year on their calling plan than they did on their phones.

Phones range from $19 for a hand-held to $1,000 for the new, top-of-the-line Star-Tac.

The average hand-held phone will cost about $50, Town said.

"It just depends on which phone you wanted," he said.

Security is another reason students use cellular phones, Lynn said. There is no way to get a phone number, unless the user gives it to you.

Kansas Cellular does not give out phone numbers and will change the number and calling scope whenever the user wants, Lynn said.

Cellular buying tips

1. Determine what kind of phone you want.
   - mobile: can be permanently installed in car.
   - transportable: mobile but can be removed from car.
   - portable: lightweight, hand-held.
2. Determine your area of primary use.
   - For city or flat terrain, any model is fine.
   - In hilly or rural areas, more power is needed.
3. Shop around for a carrier, looking for free minutes.
4. Expect to spend $55-$60 a month on the bill.

Attendance borders on shameful

SPEED

▶ The low attendance at Wednesday night's concert and symphony bands performance was due to student apathy and a low sense of interest.

ERICA DUNCAN
staff reporter

Story telling has become a lost art.

The stories are still out there, and people are still telling them, but no one is listening.

About half of the open seating was vacant Wednesday night when the K-State concert and symphony bands performed. Not even 1 percent of K-State's 20,000 students attended the concert.

Students do not have to go to a big-name, expensive concert to hear good music and have a good time.

Those who attended experienced a well-orchestrated production.

Most of the pieces the concert band performed illustrated a total, worldly view. The first piece began forcefully, setting the pace for the entire evening.

Each song in the collection depicted an aspect of life.

They each had their own meanings, yet there was a central theme of nature and life in general.

An eerie "Night Dances" allowed the audience to experience a summer night in the middle of nowhere without going outside.

The percussion section enabled people to close their eyes and envision the crickets chirping, the wind blowing through the tall grasses, and any other eerie sounds that would scare the pants off anyone alone in the wilderness.

The narration of "Canticle" posed an unusual situation for a musical piece. It did not leave much to the imagination of the audience members.

They were virtually forced to see what the narrator was showing them, because music is an abstract art form and should be interpreted individually.

The percussionists were constantly moving around. If they weren't at their instruments, they were running to another instrument.

The symphony band's superlative introduction demonstrated its complete preparedness.

The music got faster and faster and the xylophonist's hands blurred until it was chaotic.

It seemed as if it would keep going until chaos hit. Then, instantly, it was calm.

Once again music told the story of life.

The mixture of slow and fast pieces kept the audiences' attention, never allowing their eyes to rest.

Despite the jokes Frank Tracz, band director, told about the presidential debate, the percussionists mesmerizing performance stole the show.

In the 1900s, citizens were taxed to form a band for their entertainment.

If the citizens of Manhattan and the students of K-State were taxed, perhaps they would take the time to see what entertainment the K-State Department of Music has to offer.

Brentano Quartet to fill in at McCain after group cancels

JESS LOUK
staff reporter

The Orlando Quartet was slated to perform at McCain Auditorium at 3 p.m. Sunday. To come to Manhattan, the quartet would have to travel from Holland.

"A foreign group to come to the states for a tour needs a certain number of dates in order to make it economically feasible," Richard Martin, director of McCain, said.

SPEED READ

▶ The Brentano String Quartet will play at 7 p.m. Sunday at McCain Auditorium because of a cancellation by the Orlando Quartet.

The Brentano String Quartet will take the Orlando Quartet's place. The Brentano Quartet will play at 7 p.m. Sunday at McCain. The time had to be moved from 3 p.m. in order to accommodate the quartet's travel itinerary.

"If it is appropriate to talk about a string quartet being a hot property, the Brentano are certainly that," Martin said.

The Brentano Quartet won the 1995 Naumburg Chamber of Music Award. Receiving the Naumburg award is comparable to winning the Nobel Prize of chamber music, Martin said.

The Brentano Quartet will perform three pieces, Schubert's "String Quartet in G Minor," Chou Wen-Chung's "Clouds" and Beethoven's "String Quartet in B-Flat Major."

The quartet features two violins, one viola and a cello.

The group's members have teaching residencies at Princeton University and Middlebury College.

The group is the quartet-in-residence at New York University.

Dance program plans to leave Ahearn for Nichols

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

A year from this coming spring, the dance program could shuffle off to Nichols Hall.

The dance program is currently in Ahearn Gymnasium, even though it is operated by the Department of Speech Communication, Theater and Dance.

Luke Kahlich, director of the dance program, said moving closer to the department office would be advantageous for scheduling meetings, picking up mail and collaborating with other faculty members.

"We need that face-to-face interaction," he said.

Kahlich said members of the department have been working on a proposal with facilities.

He said there would need to be improvements made in Nichols for dance studios and room for three faculty offices.

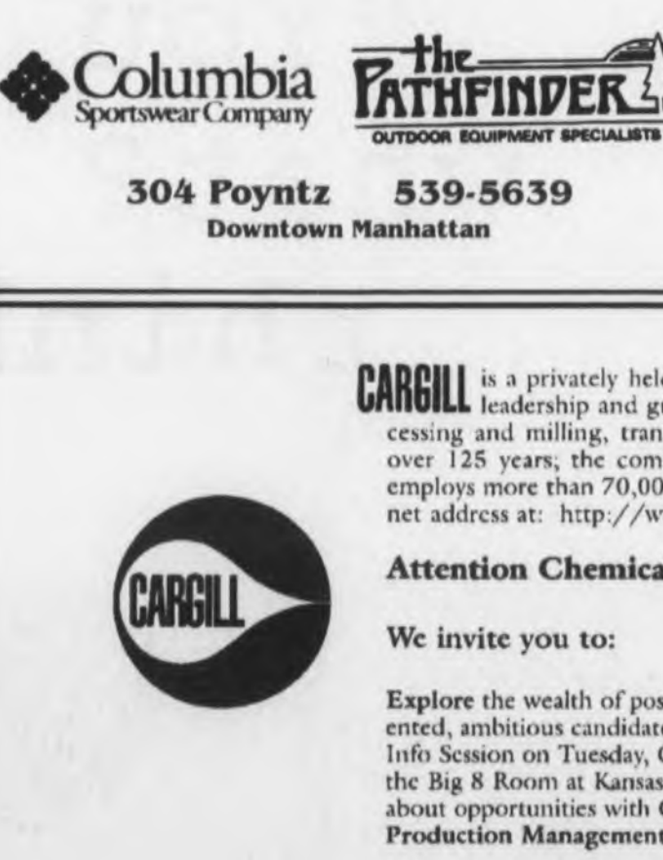
"It's possible, if things went perfectly, it could be done a year from this spring," he said.

Facilities has been helping the dance faculty plan for space needs in Nichols and budgetary concerns.

Gerald Carter, University architect and director of facilities planning, said facilities has developed some basic schematic-level costs.

Carter said possible sources of funding would include raising private funds, department money or state-allocated funds.

"We're talking low six-figures," he said.



Carter said the proposal is at the preliminary stages and has yet to be submitted to the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, the provost, or discussed as a line item in the University budget.

Beach museum celebrates artists from Kansas

"The Collective Spirit" closes Feb. 1. "Dean Mitchell: an Anthology" and "Tom Edwards and the Meditative State" both close Jan. 17. The Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art is open from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and 1 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and Sunday. Admission is free. Call 532-7718 for more information.

RUSSELL FORTMEYER
senior staff writer

With so many events, ceremonies and general anticipation surrounding the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art, it's easy to forget there are three excellent art exhibits inside.

The inaugural exhibits feature work by numerous Kansans, particularly artists Dean Mitchell and Tom Edwards.

As soon as it opened, the Beach art museum proved to be an important, if not the most important, Kansas art museum.

It's a museum that celebrates regional artists in its exhibits and does so with an exuberant pride.

"Dean Mitchell: an Anthology" will no doubt prove successful with local crowds, who have scurried to Strecker Gallery in years past to purchase his works.

It could easily be said Mitchell is at the top of Manhattan's art world with this museum show, for better or worse.

Perhaps the most glorious aspect of the exhibit is the opportunity it gives to see a variety of Mitchell works and styles hanging in a more conventional gallery space, compared to Strecker.

Seeing Mitchell's work in an exhibition reminds one of the recent Andrew Wyeth retrospective at the Nelson-Atkins Museum of Art in Kansas City, Mo.

Mitchell's work has always had a very Wyeth-esque quality, what with his perfectly wrought technique in watercolor — and occasionally oil — that dazzles the eye.

Although some of his work doesn't quite reach Wyeth's height of emotional effect, particularly some of the architectural scenes, it does well enough.

Some of the portraits have an uncanny resemblance to Wyeth's more recent work, such as "Mighty is the Piper," watercolor with graphite on watercolor board, 1989.

Mitchell's portraiture remains his strong suit, with an increasing interest in the human condition. This trait is most notable in his compassionate painting "Between the Walls," oil on masonite, 1996, a brilliantly composed and balanced portrait.

This show also features recent abstract work, such as "Pears," oil on masonite, 1996, which is apparently so abstract it can be viewed both right-side-up and upside-down, when comparing the actual painting as hung in the gallery and the picture in the gallery brochure.

This painting will surprise locals who are more accustomed to Mitchell's more realist technique.

Edwards, whose work was also the most recent Friends of Art gift print, is the continuation of a long, proud tradition of printmakers associated with Kansas, so it is most fitting the Beach art museum dedicate an exhibit to his work.

In "Tom Edwards and the Meditative State," one is literally taken on a journey through Edwards' masterful process of creating, revising, augmenting and finishing prints.

Such is the case with "Three Houses," of which there are three versions in the exhibit, where it becomes a game picking out which image has faded, which darkened, and what object has appeared from the artist's mind.

"The Collective Spirit: Selected Works from the Permanent Collection" is such a delight to finally see.

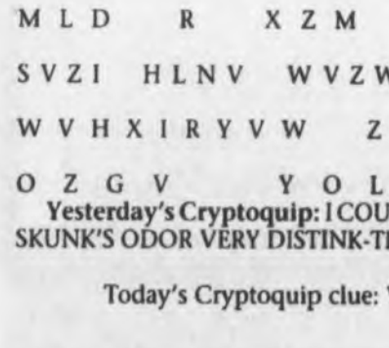
How many years have these works secretly yearned to be united in a gallery space and shown in all their glory?

One may have quite the time simply guessing which work hung in which Anderson Hall office the past few decades.

The standout painting, which has been kept quite secret up until the Beach art museum opened, is John Steuart Curry's magnificent "Sunrise (Sunrise Over Kansas)," oil on canvas, 1935.

A recent Friends purchase from the Curry family, the Beach art museum can now boast one of the artist's most brilliant, if not dramatic, works — Ruth Ann Wefald, of the Friends of Art, considers it a rival of his Topeka Statehouse murals — and a postcard view of Kansas.

Robert Sudlow's "Winter Pastoral," oil on canvas, 1949, is actually part of a mini-exhibition of works acquired through John Helm's Regional Biennial Exhibitions between 1950 and 1970.



Sudlow's career as an artist has taken a real turn since 1950. He's now the quintessential Kansas landscape artist.

Helm was the K-State art professor who started the Friends of Art and the foundation of the K-State art collection in the late 1920s, especially with the acquisition of two Birger Sandzén oil paintings, which hang in the gallery named for him.

"Collective Spirit" is almost equally divided between prints and paintings — showing the diversity of regionalist art in the collection.

To finally see the art so stunningly displayed and the exhibitions so intelligently conceived is a tribute to Helm's lasting vision recast as a collective vision of the many supporters of this fine new resource and campus diversion.

Musician prepares for Manhattan recital

> "I have a lot of experience giving recitals, and I like to sing opera arias, but I was not certain what kind of recital to give."

A native of Seoul, South Korea, Kee-ok Kim Chung studied music in Italy and gave recitals in places such as New York City. When she came to Manhattan two years ago, she said she was surprised at how small it was.

She was used to big cities. She was in Kansas with her husband, looking for an agent to set up a concert tour. She found Jerry Langenkamp, music department chairman for voice and director of the opera program.

Langenkamp invited her to sing at K-State. She discussed it with him for several months. It was difficult to decide which songs to perform, Chung said.

"I have a lot of experience giving recitals, and I like to sing opera arias, but I was not certain what kind of recital to give," she said.

Chung will perform in a recital at 8 Friday night McCain Auditorium.

"This is my first concert in Manhattan. I think audiences will be surprised," she said.

Chung will sing 16 - 18 arias from America, France, Italy and Korea. She plans four costume changes — two in Korean costume when she sings Korean songs and two in western clothing for the others.

"Some songs are heavy, and some are light. A recitalist decides to mix some of each kind of song. I am satisfied with this program, and I feel comfortable with the pianist. The pianist makes the mood," she said.

"As a performer, I find it exciting to see a lot of people in the audience," she said.

Langenkamp said he enjoys listening to her voice.

"She has a beautiful voice and is very well-trained. Her singing is very expressive," he said.

Langenkamp will join Chung in one number from "La Traviata."

When she's not performing, Chung sings at home for her daughter and son.

"When I sing for my daughter, she sings along, but my son puts his fingers in his ears," she said.

ity field data of a three-dimensional flow using pulse lasers and record it on a hologram," Meng said. After processing the hologram, it is possible to reconstruct the information, allowing for a highly resolved measurement of the velocity field.

"This is very important, because in a lot of processes turbulent flows are involved. For example, in a chemical reaction, you want to mix different reactants together. It is very important to have the details of the flow to understand what it is doing," Meng said.

When holographic PIV is fully developed, industries to predict these flows. One of the industries will be able to trying this new technique is the Wright-Patterson Air Force base in Dayton, Ohio.

way I would have been ready to be an engineering student at K-State with these requirements."

The board also passed an amendment to the proposal that clearly separates required curricula for students seeking state scholarships and students who only wish to achieve minimum entrance requirements.

Students seeking scholarships will be required to take chemistry, physics and biology. These students will also be required to take two years of a foreign language.

The board developed a list of budget priorities for fiscal year 1997-98. Maintaining the existing base budget, making non-enhancement budget adjustments and increasing the current services budget were the top three priorities.

The fourth item was salary enhancements, and the fifth was a one-time equipment enhancement.

Hansen questioned the board's low placement of the equipment enhancement on its list of priorities.

The board said the first three items simply maintain the budget from year to year, and equipment enhancement is a high priority.

"They have decided to pursue a one-time technology and equipment of $12 million, which comes out of interest from state idle funds," Hansen later said to Student Senate.

CHEATING

can do something about it. If a confrontation is not possible, they should be able to talk to a faculty member or give them an anonymous note.

"This has everything to do with the quality of your degree, not being a whistle blower," Spooner said.

Spooner said he has no grudges against the cheating students.

"I hope they get their acts together and end their college careers successfully," Spooner said.

The students involved might have learned an important lesson about ethics as well. Chris Glenn, senior in advertising, had to take Principles of Biology a second time last spring.

"The first time everyone cheated, but the second time nobody did. At least the people I took it with didn't cheat," Glenn said.

Another student said he learned his lesson on the subject of cheating. He said he was careful the second time.

"I wouldn't have done it (cheated) again, because I was afraid that I would be kicked out of K-State," Brian Rader, senior in radio-television, said.

Cheating shouldn't be considered a shortcut, Spooner said.

"Where we are now as a university, we need to recognize that these things happen and learn from history, and realize it is not a good gamble, because the consequences are severe," Spooner said.

Winterizing homes saves tenants cash

JACQUELINE BONE
staff reporter

Winter is sneaking around the corner and through the cracks into the living room.

Air leaks around windows and doors increase utility bills and create that uncomfortable draft in the living room. Inching the thermostat up is not the answer.

"Normally enough air leaks in it's like having a window open all day," said Shane Good, controls manager of Thermal Comfort Air Inc.

There are several steps students can take to winterize their homes or apartments to save money on energy bills.

The simplest energy saver is to seal the windows.

Good suggests purchasing a plastic window sealer, available at most hardware stores. A hair dryer is all that is needed for installation. Price depends on the window's size, and ranges from $3.29 to $19.99 at Waters True Value Hardware.

Students can seal windows and cracks with caulk, which can also be purchased at any hardware store for minimal cost. Caulk is a plastic sealer in a tube that can be applied to cracks to seal them easily and cleanly. Be sure to check with your landlord before caulking.

Another good idea is to buy a humidifier.

"Portable humidifiers are really nice," said Gene Huse, owner and operator of Cascade Refrigeration.

Dry air makes it feel cooler, Good said. A humidifier adds moisture to the air, making it feel warmer.

Wal-Mart carries portable humidifiers ranging in price from $25 to $50, and they cover 1,000 — 1,685 square feet of living space.

Humidifiers should be cleaned often to avoid bacteria and dirt build-up that can be unhealthy, Huse said. The filter can be removed and washed to keep the unit clean.

Home-owners should consider humidifiers that work with the central air system rather than portable units, Huse said.

Huse and Good said they agree heating and cooling equipment should be serviced regularly. The most common problem is dirty filters or dirty burners in a gas-fueled system, Good said.

"If it's dirty or a part is not working properly, the unit won't run as efficiently," Huse said. Equipment that does not run right can cost more in utility bills, because it is not using energy efficiently. A regular service checkup can detect problems, and the system can be cleaned.

Heating units should be serviced at least once a year. A regular checkup costs about $45, Good said.

Insulation is also important, Huse said. Insulation should be added to the attic if needed, but the attic needs room to breathe, Huse said. Walls can also be fortified if needed.

By following some simple suggestions, students can reduce their utility bill by at least 10 percent, Good said.

Home winterizing tips

1. Schedule a heating-system tune-up. A qualified heating contractor will see that the heating system is operating efficiently and delivering maximum savings on the fuel or electric bill.
2. Clean furnace filters. Dirty filters block the warm air flow in the home, causing the furnace to work harder and less economically.
3. Lower the thermostat for savings. Try setting the thermostat to 68 degrees, and lower it a few degrees at night.
4. Seal windows with caulk or plastic weather-stripping.
5. Save hot water and the money and energy to heat it by substituting a shower for a bath whenever possible.

■ Galitzer, Vargo compete for county clerk position.

DEBBIE HOLLIS
staff reporter

The candidates for this year's race for Riley County clerk are Jan Galitzer and Rich Vargo.

The duties of the clerk are set by state statute, Ilene Colbert, county clerk, said. Colbert is not running for re-election, because she is retiring.

She said it was important to elect someone who is honest and hard-working.

Galitzer, a Democrat, said her experience working with large groups of people will benefit the clerk's position.

She has worked on the administration of the U.S. Department of Agriculture grant in K-State's extension office, the conference division of Continuing Education and various volunteer boards in the community.

Galitzer also said her background in education will help her.

"My goal is to take the next step and increase voter turnout," she said. "Programs with schools and youth

To kiss a pig

KHRIS HOUSE, left, senior in architectural engineering, bends over to kiss a pig Saturday afternoon at Weber Arena. Members of the Goodnow Hall Governing Board were there to witness the event, which was part of their fundraiser for the Sunset Zoological Park chimpanzee exhibit. For the fund raiser, selected HGB members had jars in the Goodnow Hall lobby, into which residents dropped money. House had to kiss the pig because his jar accumulated the highest amount of change.

Below, CHARITY WOODSON, senior in journalism and mass communications, kisses a pig because she had the highest amount of paper money in her jar. About $185 was raised, which will be used to buy $50 bricks for the Sunset Zoo chimpanzee exhibit.

Proposal uses loss of license to decrease teen drug use

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — In a pre-election bid to polish his anti-drug credentials Saturday, President Clinton proposed using the loss of teen-agers' coveted driver's licenses as a tool to curb youth drug use and drinking.

Clinton also said he suggested testing for drug usage every teen-age applicant for a driver's license, with licenses denied to those who fail. He said he hoped "the 90 percent who are drug-free" would participate willingly in such a program to enable identification of teens who use drugs.

Clinton

Clinton declared a new zero-tolerance regulation for teen drinking and said states that fail to bar young people from drinking and driving will lose a percentage of their federal highway aid.

In his weekly radio address, the president said he has a double-barreled message:

■ "If you're under 21 and you drink, you can't drive — period."

■ "No drugs — or no driver's license."

Clinton has been hammered repeatedly by Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole for presiding over a sharp increase in drug use by young people.

Commenting for the Dole-Kemp campaign, spokeswoman Christina Martin said, "It's a shame Bill Clinton has been asleep at the wheel of leadership for three years while drug use among 12- to 17-year-olds skyrocketed 105 percent. Today's proposal is simply too little, too late."

In his address, Clinton said he is directing the White House drug policy chief, retired Army Gen. Barry McCaffrey, and Transportation Secretary Federico Pena to develop within 90 days a plan requiring that young people be tested for drugs as a condition of obtaining driver's licenses. He said that might require new legislation.

He also said he would seek the help of the vast majority of American youth who don't use illegal drugs to help identify and change the habits of those who do.

"Let me make one thing clear," Clinton said. "Even though teen drug use is up, all the evidence is that 90 percent of our children are drug-free. They are doing the right thing. They are not experimenting.

"So we're asking them, the 90 percent who are drug-free, to be responsible enough to participate in this drug-testing program to help us identify the 10 percent who are on the brink of getting in trouble and get them away from drugs before it's too late," he said.

In a memo to McCaffrey and Pena, Clinton said he believes the lure of a driver's license is so compelling for most young people that it can be used to affect their behavior.

Inside
President Clinton's proposal to deny privileges to underage drinkers and implement drug testing raises questions that the Collegian editorial board addresses today.

Building section to be named in honor of Dean Rathbone

> "This is the first time in my 10 years here we named a building after someone. We don't do this willy-nilly."
> ● JON WEFALD
> UNIVERSITY PRESIDENT

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

After 23 years as the dean of engineering at K-State, Donald Rathbone will retire during the first half of 1997.

But he's leaving something behind — his name.

Upon his retirement, K-State will rename Durland Hall, which was built in 1983. Phase II of the K-State Engineering Complex will be renamed Donald E. Rathbone Hall.

"This is the first time in my 10 years here we named a building after someone. We don't do this willy-nilly. When I presented this to the Board of Regents last Thursday, they approved it unanimously," President Jon Wefald said. "We know it's the right thing to do."

Wefald said the reason Durland II was being named after Rathbone was that he has provided exceptional service to the College of Engineering for the past 23 years.

"I've been at K-State for 10 years, and in my time here — and his 23 years — he has added so much to the University. When you go back to 1973, there were 949 undergrads in the College of Engineering. Now there are over 2,600," Wefald said.

The designation of the building is fitting for a career that will be a lasting example at K-State, Provost James Coffman said.

The research budget was about $500,000 when Rathbone came to K-State, Wefald said. Now it totals more than $20 million.

The efforts of faculty, department heads and the directors of research institutes and research centers helped establish national research programs at the College of Engineering, Rathbone said.

Rathbone

"The associate dean for research, Gale Simons, shows great leadership and faculty across the board, created tremendous success. The whole group deserves recognition," Rathbone said.

During the Essential Edge campaign, more than $33 million was raised for K-State. Wefald said Rathbone was a leader in raising the money. Rathbone said he received tremendous support from the advisory committee and the KSU Foundation.

"The advisory committee consists of 20 people from around the country, all K-State engineering graduates. They provide financial support and contacts for students," he said. "Recognition should go to people like Leroy Pasley

REALITY CHECK FOR PET OWNERS

Knowledge, responsibility play part in pet care

ANDREW FRANCIS
staff reporter

The cute, innocent puppy at the pet store was so playful and fun his first day in your apartment. But the cuteness wears off when you have to clean up puppy piles after getting home from a long day of classes.

The puppy's innocence seems like a soft whimper from the past now that every piece of furniture in the apartment has teeth marks ingrained in the wood.

Who would have thought owning a pet includes responsibility?

Dr. William Fortney, associate professor in the College of Veterinary Medicine, said people should be educated about the pet they want to get.

"Become informed consumers. Research the pet before you buy it," Fortney said.

He said he does not see many cases of abuse or neglect, but he said he does see cases where students do not consider the consequences and responsibilities pet ownership contains.

"College students are no different than anyone else. They just make poor decisions," Fortney said.

Students sometimes fail to consider pet selection. A St. Bernard puppy might seem cute, but when that puppy becomes a grown dog, a one-bedroom apartment might become, to say the least, a little cramped.

"Active animals need a lot of exercise," Fortney said.

RICK DRUSE/Collegian
KAREN BOOKER and her dog, Brandy, relax after the completion of an event at the Heartland Dog Training Club Saturday in the Kansas National Guard building. The dogs were being tested on their obedience.

Most cats can get an adequate amount of exercise in a small apartment, but most dogs require routine exercise.

Pets that are too aggressive can be problematic for students who do not have time to properly raise an animal. Problems with aggression and behavioral problems can develop.

There are many games people play with pets that can increase their aggression. According to information distributed by

24 HOURS IN REVIEW

NATION WORLD

• NAACP OUT OF DEBT. After more than two years of controversy about its leadership, direction and finances, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has completely retired its debt and is rebuilding. Just one year ago, the NAACP was struggling with $4 million in debt and still searching for a replacement for fired executive director Benjamin Chavis.

"The NAACP for the first time is operating in the black," said President Kweisi Mfume.

• BIG SUR FIRE SPREADS. A fast-moving wildfire along California's scenic Big Sur coastline sent vacationers and residents packing Saturday, closing two state parks and parts of Highway 1. By Saturday evening, the fire had blackened 650 acres. About 980 firefighters battled the blaze about 30 miles south of Monterey. The fire threatened dozens of buildings. Officials evacuated the residents of about 25 homes Saturday morning, but most were allowed to return home by nightfall.

• HEBRON TALKS BRING OPTIMISM. Israelis and Palestinians resumed informal talks Saturday on Israeli troop withdrawal from the West Bank city of Hebron, and a Palestinian leader expressed optimism for the first time. Formal negotiations are to resume Monday in the Israeli Red Sea resort of Eilat. The Palestinians have demanded a schedule for negotiating other aspects of the agreement. They include the safe passage for Palestinians across Israeli territory between the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, and the further withdrawal of Israeli troops from rural areas surrounding Palestinian cities in the West Bank.

• PROTESTANT MOB ATTACKS AT SOCCER MATCH. A stone-throwing mob attacked Roman Catholic soccer fans from Belfast, Ireland on Saturday as they arrived in the largely Protestant town of Portadown to see a game. Catholic players' families, including children as young as 4, were caught up in the attack by hard-line pro-British Protestant protesters. One of the buses was badly damaged. More than 10 people were injured, among them five police officers.

• THREE DEAD IN TROPICAL STORM BETH. Tropical Storm Beth moved across the South China Sea on Sunday after pounding the northern Philippines, killing at least three people and damaging hundreds of homes. Packing 60 mph winds, the storm hit several northern provinces Saturday night, tearing away roofs, smashing windows, downing power lines and triggering floods. The bodies of two drowning victims were retrieved in northern Isabela province.

• GM UNION DISPUTE CONTINUES. Leaders of the Canadian Auto Workers, whose strike has shut down all General Motors operations in Canada, were pessimistic Sunday that their differences with GM could be resolved by a noon Monday deadline. CAW president Buzz Hargrove, during a break in bargaining at a Toronto hotel, said he was still waiting for GM negotiators to come up with a new offer on the contentious issue of outsourcing — farming out work on auto parts to less-costly independent suppliers. The CAW wants the automaker to follow the example of Chrysler Canada by accepting limits on outsourcing in order to protect union jobs. GM says it needs more flexibility to remain competitive.

• JAPAN ELECTIONS. The prime minister's party won a parliamentary election Sunday on vows to overhaul the bureaucracy that dominates Japanese policy-making. But even as the results came in, Ryutaro Hashimoto appeared to back away from his promises. Hashimoto's conservative party captured almost half the seats in Japan's lower house of Parliament to secure a dominant place in government. The results of Sunday's election mean all but certain re-election for Hashimoto as prime minister and a return to glory for the Liberal Democratic Party, which governed Japan alone from 1955 to 1993.

• PLANE CRASHES IN MAINE, KILLS EIGHT. A twin-engine chartered plane bound for Maine crashed in a field and exploded Sunday, killing all eight people aboard. The Piper Navajo was on its way from Anticosti Island in Canada to Bangor, Maine, when it radioed that it was having mechanical problems. The plane was a charter of Telford Aviation Inc., based in Waterville, Maine.

Dining-center menus offer variety of foods to students

> "I think it is a matter of people mixing things in their diet. I try to do that with our menu."
> • BARBARA SCHEULE
> ADMINISTRATIVE DIETITIAN

College might be the first time many people become their own food gatekeepers.

"Especially for your new student that this is their first time away from home, mom and dad have been the food gatekeepers," Janette Gehler, Lafene Health Center dietitian, said.

"They're the ones that have been making a lot of the food decisions by what is in the house and what is being served," she said.

As these food gatekeepers, students who eat in residence-hall dining centers have many choices, said Barbara Scheule, administrative dietitian for the Department of Housing and Dining Services. Gehler said problems arise when people are not aware of their decisions.

"I see a lot of fast food, late-night snacking, not drinking milk and drinking a lot of soda," Gehler said.

Scheule said she also sees the fast-food trend. She said this puts people in the frame of mind to think "What am I in the mood for tonight?" every time they eat.

So she tries to provide as many options as she can when she writes dining-center menus.

"I think it is a matter of people mixing things in their diet," she said. "I try to do that with our menu."

She said there is always a deli line and a classic line, which serves different entrees and sides at every meal. There are also lines with tacos, hot dogs, hamburgers, French fries, pizza and pasta.

Dining centers also offer peanut butter, jelly, cereal, a salad bar, a condiment bar and a dessert bar.

The salad bars offer low-fat or fat-free dressings.

The dessert bars offer in-season fruit, which includes bananas, pears and strawberries right now. They also offer ice cream and other desserts.

Dining centers also offer meatless and vegetarian items, which are identified on the menus by Ms and Vs.

Scheule said the vegetarian items would be considered more vegan, because they do not use any animal products.

Gehler said how healthy you eat in dining centers depends on your choices.

Andrea Sdano, freshman in accounting, who eats in Derby Food Center, said, "Everything is loaded down with cheese, and it's greasy."

Gehler said it is possible to avoid these problems. She said students should stay away from fried items and cream sauces. She also said they should use low-fat or fat-free salad dressing and eat poultry.

However, she said red meat is not always bad. It depends on what you do to it, in the same way that baked potatoes are not bad, unless they are loaded down with things like cheese and sour cream.

Scheule said, "The deli line is always going to be a good bet. The meats are very, very lean. And the turkey on there is a turkey breast, and as such it's very lean. The ham is very lean."

She also said people should take a vegetable and eat some fresh fruit.

"The soup is generally going to be a good choice," Scheule said, "except the creams are made with whole milk."

She said your milk choice can make a difference, too.

"Choose skim milk. Maybe top it off with a little bit of whole, but not a lot," she said.

"If you're drinking 2 percent now, try to get down to 1 percent," she said. "Once you're used to 1 percent, go down to skim."

Scheule also puts health tips, called fitcourse, on the dining-center menus and on the tables. She said she uses them to tell students it's helpful to eat.

"Then I go on to give them some FYI information," she said.

The fitcourse tip on the menu for Sept. 16-22 compared eating to filling up a car with gasoline. According to the fitcourse tip, eating breakfast enhances the ability to learn, and skipping meals often results in overeating at the next meal or grabbing a high-fat snack.

Stateroom provides low-fat food options for nutrition seekers

Fan loaves, bagel-veggie sandwiches, a salad bar, Mexican food, donuts — they're all offered in the K-State Student Union Stateroom.

"There's so much junk offered that you just get tempted," Jill deVries, sophomore in advertising and marketing, said.

She said she thinks it's difficult to eat nutritiously in the Stateroom. But Katharine Grunewald, professor of foods and nutrition, said it is possible if students try to eat low-fat and avoid certain foods.

"If they want to go low-fat, the thing to do would be to get a sandwich without salad dressing, like no mayonnaise," Grunewald said.

Grunewald said she likes to eat a turkey sandwich for lunch — just bread, turkey and mustard, because mustard doesn't have very much fat.

She sometimes adds a salad with low-calorie salad dressing to the sandwich. She also recommends drinking low-fat or skim milk instead of soda.

"That's what you call a nutritious, low-fat meal," she said.

If students are sacrificing nutrition to go for cheap food — like a lone 80-cent fan loaf — Grunewald said there are little things they can do without spending much more.

"If they want to improve on it, they could drink a carton of milk with it," she said. "And if they have more money, they can get a salad."

Adding the milk costs 55 cents, and the salad bar is 18 cents an ounce.

Barb Depew, production manager in the Stateroom, also said students can eat healthily there if they make the right choices. She said she tries to offer lots of options, including a vegetarian item every day.

"We're doing lighter soups, not as many cream soups," she said. "We are checking into some Healthy Choice meats. That's just a low-fat, low-sodium product."

Grunewald said it's helpful for the Stateroom to offer this selection.

"The biggest concern from a nutritionist's point of view is to reduce fat and get a balance and variety of food items," she said.

However, Grunewald said students should avoid some items, such as potato and macaroni salads.

"For students who are watching their fat and watching their calories, the Union is a pretty good place to eat," Grunewald said.

"The driver's license is a privilege that should not be available to those who fail to demonstrate responsible behavior," he said.

"Denial of driving privileges to those who engage in illegal drug use can be a powerful incentive to stay away from and off drugs."

"I believe we should consider drug-testing all minors applying for driver's licenses and requiring them to be found drug-free before they can obtain driver's licenses," he said. "Young people must understand that drug use cannot and will not be tolerated. Making licenses conditional on the driver being drug-free may prove to be an important and effective way to send that message."

Clinton said he is convinced pulling the licenses of youth drivers who test positive for even a tiny amount of alcohol in their blood will be equally effective.

He said the Transportation Department would issue a regulation Monday implementing a law passed by Congress that requires all states to make zero tolerance for alcohol a required standard for youth drivers.

More than 2,200 young people died in alcohol-related car crashes last year, a number Clinton said can be sharply reduced.

Under terms of the new regulation, he said, all states must now pass new laws permitting suspension of driver's licenses of people under 21 who are found to be driving after drinking. The penalty for failure to act is forfeiture of up to 10 percent a year of federal highway-construction money.

New law cracks down on drug smuggling

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON, D.C. — President Clinton signed legislation Saturday that is designed to strengthen the Coast Guard's ability to help fight illegal drugs by limiting foreign drug runners' ability to challenge arrest at sea.

In signing the bill into law, Clinton said it makes clear that smuggling suspects arrested in international waters cannot claim immunity on the ground that their vessel was under foreign registry. The only exception is if the government involved verifies the vessel's registry at the time it is targeted for boarding.

"By eliminating this commonly used defense, the act strengthens the hand of prosecutors in drug-smuggling cases," Clinton said in a statement.

The president said the new law also strengthens the Coast Guard's own program to curb drug use by mariners, authorizing civil penalties of up to $1,000 a day for violations of drug-testing regulations.

OPINION

IN OUR OPINION

Mandatory drug testing borders on excessive

If you drink or do drugs, you might have to wait for your license.

Sounds reasonable doesn't it?

President Clinton's newest proposal is aimed at Republican attacks that fault Clinton for the 105-percent increase in drug use among teens.

WHY WE CARE

Clinton's latest proposal to curve teen drug use is commendable, but it will be costly to the states and could violate some people's rights.

If this proposal were to become law, all people younger than 21 years old would have to get a drug test done when they go get their license, and there would be a national zero-tolerance law.

We think that while his efforts are commendable, they are the response of election-year politics. And they are a bit excessive.

We probably all agree that driving under the influence of alcohol or illicit drugs is a bad thing. But we need to be reasonable.

Who is going to pay for these tests? Urinalysis tests are not free. They are quite costly.

More than likely, the cost of the tests will be passed to the states.

After that, the cost will be passed to us via the price of our driver's license.

We also think this borders on age discrimination and might qualify as an invasion of privacy. Why are only those younger than 21-years-old being tested for drug use? Aren't drugs illegal for everyone — regardless of how old they are?

Of course the answer is yes. Singling out one group of people is unfair and probably unconstitutional. If we're going to test a 19-year-old, we need to look at the 65-year-old.

We agree with Clinton on the second part of his proposal. A national zero-tolerance policy might be in order.

You might remember the zero-tolerance laws from our state legislators.

Kansas recently passed a law saying people who are younger than 21 who are caught with any alcohol in their system while driving will have their licenses suspended until they turn 21 years old.

We think this part of Clinton's proposal is feasible.

A nationwide push for this law might be a good idea.

So while Clinton's ideas regarding drug testing have good intentions behind them, they are too expensive and alienate an entire group based on age.

How rude!

Poor tipping for good service leaves the wait staff feeling unappreciated and unable to pay rent

MY

Nicole KIRBY

Two of my friends recently told me they always tip $1 or $2, no matter what the check total is and no matter how wonderful the service was.

I am a server, so I know this is not uncommon.

But like my mother always told me, just because everyone is doing it doesn't make it right.

I can work my rear end off, running back and forth at a customer's whims, anticipating every need and ensuring a pleasurable dining experience, and still get only 10 percent of the total.

I could understand such a bad tip if I were having a bad night and things hadn't been satisfactory, but more often than not, it's not the service that justifies low tips.

One excuse I've heard is that people don't have enough money to tip.

In a real, sit-down, gotta-wear-shoes-and-a-shirt restaurant, the tip is part of the price of going out to eat.

If you can't afford 15 percent of your bill, you shouldn't have ordered so much.

Being a poor college student is not an excuse. The person waiting on you is a poor college student, too.

Your servers are only making $2.13 an hour, so they are relying on your generosity to pay their bills.

In fact, because I was lucky enough to pick up an extra shift this weekend, my rent check won't bounce. I'm sure my landlord appreciates the generosity of everyone who sat in my section Saturday night.

Oh, and in case you weren't sure, the appropriate tip for good service is 15 percent or more.

If that is difficult to calculate, let me share the quick trick that I use to see if I've been stiffed.

First take 10 percent of the total (if your ticket is $20, that would be $2). Then add half of that total (so adding half, or $1, would make a $3 tip).

The math is easier if you round up.

> "Positive feedback is a wonderful thing, and I love to hear that I am doing a good job, but there is nothing in this world more annoying than being gushingly praised by someone who ends up leaving three bucks on a $40 tab."

If you can figure out how much is a good tip, I guarantee you you'll get even better service in the future.

And if you can't, well, I won't be held responsible for your server's lack of attention.

If you've decided no amount of butt-kissing will elicit 15 percent from you, then you'd better hope you get a different server next time you go to that restaurant.

Actually, my own memory isn't good enough to remember how well a person tipped me the last time I waited on them, but I've worked with enough people who hold grudges to say that tipping badly in your favorite restaurant is bad politics.

And if someone says to me, "That two-top they just seated in your section is a good tipper," that two-top can expect some darn good service.

Good service, although servers try to give it to every table, is not a reward in itself.

Positive feedback is a wonderful thing, and I love to hear that I am doing a good job, but there is nothing in this world more annoying than being gushingly praised by someone who ends up leaving three bucks on a $40 tab.

Because I know how this feels, anyone who waits on me can expect to receive 20 percent or more.

I've even been known to leave a 15-percent tip for crappy service.

We all have bad days.

This said, I can understand not every server deserves a good tip.

If the Wicked Witch of the West waits on you, lets your water glass stay empty, forgets your steak sauce, slams your food down on the table, never checks on you and makes you late for your movie, then by all means show your displeasure by leaving a bad tip.

But if you're really honest, you have to admit there aren't many servers out there who are that bad.

And the next time you go out to eat, if your service is satisfactory, you should cough up at least 15 percent.

MATT HAWKINS/Collegian

the rules:

They haven't changed; they've been modified.

MY

Mary Renee SMITH

I like men. They're generally nice people. They can be taught. Men have learned that no means no. Now they wait until you're unconscious to take advantage of you.

Women on the other hand don't seem to be getting any smarter. We have hidden behind a great big I-am-a-victim sign and figured we aren't responsible for the repercussions of our stupidity.

It seems we have forgotten there are rules to sex.

You would think we wouldn't need to be taught the rules anymore. We are the MTV generation. We listen to Trojan commercials on the radio. We wear red ribbons for AIDS awareness. But apparently we haven't changed a damned thing.

I am going to lay it out plain and simple. I will speak slowly and use little words so we will all understand. The rules are common sense.

Last year before school let out for the summer, my son brought a cute little flier home from school with some safety tips. I think universities and police departments everywhere should hand this flier out to college students. Maybe we could learn a few things.

- I will always play or go places with at least one other person — vs. alone.

Don't go anywhere alone. But the other person should be someone you know. A good rule of thumb is if you don't know someone's middle name, you should not play with them in compromising positions.

- I know my body belongs to me. I will trust my gut instinct. I will say NO and run away from a situation that doesn't feel right.

This is my personal favorite, simple and to the point.

- I will always tell my parents where I am going and when I'll be home. I will return home before dark.

OK, maybe this one doesn't really apply to college students. But it's a good idea to let someone know where you are going and when you might be home. Returning home before dawn or your 8:30 a.m. class is a good thing.

- I will walk and play on the routes my parents said were OK. I will avoid shortcuts and alleys.

Again, parents are a different column. Alleys and shortcuts are always a bad idea. Just a thought: There are police on the well-lit streets, but do you ever see cops in the alleys?

- I will back away from strangers who try to talk to me. I will not talk to strangers.

Aggieville is full of strangers. Greeks, athletes and musicians are some of the strangest people I have ever met. Not that all strangers are bad, it's just that some strangers are stranger than others.

- I will always lock my home and car doors. I will not admit that I am home alone.

I could have learned from this one. I would still have a car stereo. My self-esteem doesn't allow me to admit I am home alone.

- I will not play with guns. If I hear gunfire, I will duck and cover, because guns kill people.

'Nuff said.

- I will learn to dial 911. I will learn to use the pay phone without money. I will learn my address and phone number.

I have a problem with this rule. I knew a guy who knew how to use the pay phone without money. I believe he is somewhere in Mexico hiding from AT&T. As for knowing your address and phone number everyone should know that stuff by this age. But sometimes people forget the 11th commandment — thou shalt not be too drunk to know where you live.

And last but certainly not least:

- I will always wear my bike helmet when riding my bicycle.

This means "I will always wear a condom."

I don't mean to piss anyone off. But it frustrates me that we have gone this far in our education and seemingly forgotten things we should have learned in elementary school.

I love you. I just want you to be safe. (Sorry, the mommy takes over occasionally.)

Columnist was uneducated; killing animals is not inhumane

Editor,

In the Oct. 16 issue of the Collegian, Page Getz showed us yet again the uneducated, over-emotional, hollow thinking associated with her kind. We could ridicule and humiliate her, but this would solve nothing. However, we do need to educate this poor young soul about the No. 1 sector of the food industry — meat.

Getz mentions in her column that "to breed creatures for their slaughter is anything but humane." She has a point with what she says here.

The majority of domesticated livestock are raised to be slaughtered. What she fails to include are the reasons we raise livestock and the importance of the products (other than meat) that we harvest from them.

More than 47 percent of the Earth's land surface is primarily range land or forests. Range lands cannot be farmed to produce a crop such as corn. These lands also produce vegetation unfit for human consumption.

However, animals such as cattle and sheep can use these lands and their vegetation and be extremely productive. Getz also says, "animal ingredients plague products such as film, cellophane, glue, paint, plastic and tires."

We can also include in this list things like pharmaceuticals and leather products. These things are around us every day, not because they are forced upon us, but rather because they are necessities of everyday life.

As for her ignorance toward livestock-slaughtering procedures, we will bring her to speed here as well. Anyone who witnesses mass slaughtering procedures for the first time would admit that it is a little inhumane.

But as you look closer at what goes on, you realize these animals are being put to death in a very humane way. Before the animals are killed, they are stunned with either carbon dioxide, electricity or a captive bolt gun.

This stunning process takes a fraction of a second and renders the animal unconscious. The animal is then moved to a place where it is bled to death. At this part of the process, the animals' carotid artery and jugular vein are cut.

The animal loses 85-90 percent of its blood in 10-20 seconds. Now the animal is dead and ready for slaughter processing. From the time the animal is stunned until the point when it stops bleeding, the animal feels no pain.

The meat industry dates back to prehistoric times as sited by cave drawings and biblical references. So, yes, people have always eaten meat.

We apologize for your troubles at certain eating establishments. But, hey, you're behind enemy lines. Eat at home next time.

In the beginning of your column, you quote a very famous man, Leonardo Da Vinci. Well, I have a quote for you.

"Let us make man in our image, in our likeness, and let them rule over the fish of the sea and the birds of the air, over the livestock, over all the earth, and over all the creatures that move along the ground," God. (Genesis 1:26).

Meat eaters are not cannibals

Editor,

I find it disheartening that in her column "Meat-eaters border on cannibalism" Page Getz purposefully tricked readers into reading her article with a catchy title that had nothing to do with the article whatsoever.

With her accusation that eating meat is cannibalism, she makes the grievous error of believing animals are people, the same genus and species as we human beings are.

I think everyone would agree all animals certainly have personality, and we often love them, especially our pets, as though they were indeed human. Instead, she should be enlightened to the fact that humans are animals.

They are highly adaptive animals with opposable thumbs and the ability to think critically, I'll admit, but a species belonging to the kingdom Animalia nonetheless.

A cannibal is defined as a human who eats human flesh or an animal that eats its own kind. Because no domestic or wild animal is considered, by any definition I am aware of, to be of the same kind as humans, our consumption of animal flesh cannot be labeled cannibalism.

She also makes no distinction between hunting animals and domesticating animals for food, when a clear distinction exists. Does she think it was morally wrong for some Native Americans who, for thousands of years, hunted for food and blessed and thanked each animal that gave its life for their survival? Or for any of the hundreds of other cultures that have done so or continue to do so? If she does, why didn't she say that in her column?

And finally, as to her mentioning glues, paints, plastics and tires that contain animal products, if she is so content with not eating meat, would she be so content to give up the aforementioned items?

Would she stop riding her bike or driving her car because of their tires? Would she stop sending letters or bills in the mail because of the glue used to close the envelopes?

Does she live in a house or sleep in a room with bare, paint-free walls? If she should ever go to the emergency room, would she refuse treatment because of the hospital's extensive use of life-saving plastics? Get real.

I think all of this attention should be shifted away from the killing of animals to the innocent slaughter of plants by people who call themselves vegetarians.

Professors research effects of technology

ASHLEY WEEKLY
staff reporter

K-State engineers and psychologists are studying the risks Kansas companies face while innovating new technologies.

"We want to help companies evaluate and estimate the results of their innovations better than they are doing," said Farhad Azadivar, director of the Advanced Manufacturing Institute at K-State.

The study, "Tools for Managing Technological Innovation for Small Manufacturers," is being funded by a grant from the National Science Foundation. The grant has already awarded K-State researchers $95,000. If successful,the research will be granted the same amount next year.

> "We want to help companies evaluate and estimate the results of their innovations better than they are doing."
> • FARHAD AZADIVAR
> DIRECTOR OF THE K-STATE ADVANCED MANUFACTURING INSTITUTE

The study is being conducted by three areas of K-State.

The AMI Learning Center, the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research and the industrial and manufacturing systems engineering department all have researchers working on the project. Two graduate students are also helping with the study.

Plants in Kansas City and Wichita, as well as other local plants, will all be researched.

James Shanteau, psychologist and director of the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research, said he hopes the study will help guide businesses in making smart decisions.

"We would like to develop tools that plant managers can make use of in order to seek outside help. We could give them advice on reasonable risks to take and the risks not likely to succeed," Shanteau said.

Azadivar said companies have to spend effort and money to innovate. He said when companies innovate they take risks because they are uncertain of the outcome.

Shanteau said innovations affect firms and the country as a whole.

He said firms in Kansas are competing at a national and international level and must be good innovators to stay in business.

"The only thing that keeps businesses in business is to compete by increasing innovations. If they don't, they might fall behind," Azadivar said.

Shanteau said people do not adopt new innovations because of psychological reasons.

"This is an exciting application process for psychology. I'm interested because there are a whole serious of psychological reasons raised by problems like innovation. We feel we can start learning from this study as to why people are scared to take risks," Shanteau said.

Puppy training
Stop behavioral problems early

Many dogs wind up in animal shelters because they have behavioral problems. These problems can be prevented with proper training.

According to information distributed by the makers of Milk Bone Brand Dog Snacks, training a puppy to learn accepted behavior early is important. Failure to teach dogs the difference between right and wrong can result in a grown dog so out of control that it is no longer fun to be around.

If a puppy is expected to sleep in a bed or crate, make sure that behavior is enforced from the first day the puppy is at home. If the puppy cries because of separation from its mother or litter mates, a hot water bottle and a loud ticking alarm clock may comfort it.

Decide whether the dog will be allowed on the couch or furniture. If the dog is not allowed to be on the furniture, enforce this from the start.

The same is true for begging, jumping on guests and other objectionable behaviors. The dog owner should make sure the rules are obeyed from the beginning so unwanted behaviors do not become habits.

Sometimes a dog might present more serious behavior problems such as digging in the yard, excessive barking and chewing up the owner's possessions, furniture or carpet. These behaviors can be corrected with the help of a professional dog trainer.

Jeanne Saddler, director of training at the Heartland Dog Training Club, said there are many dog-training methods, and pet owners need to be educated about different techniques used to train dogs.

"Before you buy a book on dog training, check out the copyright date," Saddler said. "There have been many new methods recently introduced in dog training."

Saddler said dog owners should research trainers' methods before they entrust them with their dog. Saddler said when selecting a trainer, dog owners should consider the trainer-to-dog ratio, the trainer's reputation and the quality of time and instruction the dog will receive.

JEANNE SADDLER, training director for Heartland Dog Training Club, corrects a dog during a long-sit competition Saturday. In a normal United Kennel Club or American Kennel Club competition, trainers would not be able to correct the dogs. The matches training dubs sponsor give the dogs and owners chances to correct mistakes before they reach the UKC or AKC competitions.

PETS

Hill's Pet Nutrition Inc., playing rough with a puppy might be cute and fun, but it teaches the puppy aggressive habits that are hard to break once the dog is an adult.

Janice Swanson, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, said proper obedience training is important for the well-being of the pet.

"The best gift you can give your dog is obedience training," Swanson said. "Dogs crave having structure."

"There are literally millions of pets killed each year, because people do not have enough time to take care of their pets, or because they are in a situation where they cannot have pets," Swanson said.

Swanson said students should remember owning a pet is a long-term commitment. A dog usually lives for 10-15 years.

Students who are not sure where they will be living next year or next semester need to consider how owning a dog will affect finding a new place to live.

Students' schedules do not always allow them to have time to spend with their pets. Fortney said students with dogs should spend at least one active hour a day with their dogs. This time includes playful or affectionate interaction with the dog. Cats are more independent, but they still need attention.

Exotic animals such as reptiles and snakes are convenient, because they do not require large amounts of time or space.

Swanson said the way people act around their dogs translates to how the dogs act.

"Dogs are phenomenal for being able to read what humans are doing," Swanson said. "Students go through a lot of stress, and that stress can be translated to the pet."

Giving pets adequate amounts of physiological care is vital. Food, water, grooming and regular veterinarian checks are necessities to having healthy pets.

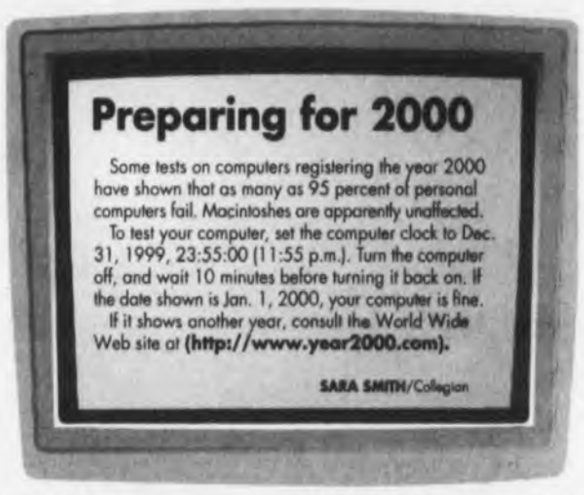
Computer bug to arrive with year 2000

MATT SPURGIN
staff reporter

The millennium bug is coming.



No, this is not some strange South American insect, but a problem that could possibly affect computer users around the world.

Once the clock inside many computers and mainframes hits 11:59 p.m. on Dec. 31, 1999, the system may travel back in time to New Year's Day, 1900. This is because many computers register dates on a two-digit basis.

John Streeter, director of the Office of Information Systems, said when digital computers first came out 50 years ago, the preference was two-digit dates. Only needing to know two digits instead of four saved a lot of space in the computers' memory.

Ken Conrow, director of Computing and Network Services, said the millennium bug will affect mainly older mainframe systems. He said some of these systems are 15-20 years old and the designers are no longer around.

Conrow said the Unix system will not be affected as much as the computers in Information Systems.

Streeter said he is making an assessment of how much it will cost to repair the problem.

The big concern now is the labor time needed. Streeter said 6,000-12,000 hours of labor would be needed to change all the information to four-digit applications, but they would allocate their labor to working on this change instead of working on other things.

"I'm not even sure if it is possible to fix them all," Streeter said.

He said the systems contain thousands of programs and hundreds of records, as well as millions of data records that will be affected.

"It's a much more complicated problem than it looks like," Streeter said.

He said some businesses, such as actuary firms, which make projections 20-30 years in advance, have been working on making programs year-2000 compatible since the 1970s, whereas K-State only uses computers to make projections five years in advance.

Cats struggle against Texas A&M to hold onto the win

DARREN WHITLEY/Collegian

Aggies take 3rd home loss of '90s from K-State's Wildcats

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

Until Saturday, it had happened only twice in the 1990s.

Thanks to a 23-20 K-State victory, Texas A&M added only the third home loss in its record book since the turn of the decade.

But the Aggies didn't give up easily, and it wasn't a pretty win for the Wildcats, now ranked No. 16 in the Associated Press poll.

Still, center Jason Johnson said he was happy with the win at Kyle Field.

"Any win is great, especially in a tough stadium," Johnson said. "They gave us a great game and fought us to the bitter end."

The Wildcats forged forth to a 20-3 lead heading into halftime.

"We felt like we were in a groove after last week against Missouri," Johnson said. "We're clicking on all cylinders right now."

But it took a tough defensive stand by the Wildcats at their own 1-yard line to prevent the Aggies from scoring a touchdown in the closing minutes of the first half.

More defensive acrobatics were required in the second half to prevent the Aggies from staging a come-from-behind victory.

It came down to the last 1:38 of the game.

The Aggies trailed by three when they gained possession at the Wildcats' 40-yard line.

An incompletion by quarterback Branndon Stewart was followed by a 5-yard gain courtesy of Sirr Parker.

And then it happened: the play to decide who would win the battle.

With third and 5 at the K-State 35, Stewart connected with wide receiver Albert Connell for an 18-yard gain at the Cats' 17-yard line. Connell was primed for the end zone when cornerback Chris Canty stripped him of the ball.

A trademark Mario Smith hit forced Connell away from the ball while Wildcat linebacker Mark Simoneau pounced on it at the 17.

With only 45 seconds remaining in the game, the Wildcats ran the clock down to preserve the win.

"I was playing man-to-man," Canty said. "I saw Mario and Simoneau breaking on him. Then I just reached my hand in there and stripped it away."

A quick glance at the game's statistics, and Wildcat fans will realize the game clearly was the Aggies' to win or lose. But a win is a win, or is it?

"I think it makes a big difference how we get it done," Coach Bill Snyder said. "We tried not to get it done. We need to improve ourselves as we go along, improve the quality of our performance. I don't think we did."

Neither did quarterback Brian Kavanagh, who said his numbers had improved in recent weeks, but he still made some poor decisions.

"I played pretty decent, but I still missed some throws," he said. "That's me, I did it."

K-State improves to 6-1 on the season, 3-1 in the Big 12, as A&M falls to 3-4 and 1-2.

The Wildcats face Oklahoma at KSU Stadium next week. The Sooners, although they struggled this season, are coming off big wins against Texas and Baylor.

K-State fans shouldn't expect Saturday's victory against A&M or the Sooners' hard-luck season to interfere with their performance against Oklahoma.

"It was a big game for us," defensive end Nyle Wiren said. "It was definitely the turning point in our season. If we'd lost, it was going to be a lot tougher season. Oklahoma is not going to be overlooked."

Mens', womens' golf teams aim for improvement

TARA WRAY
staff writer

The K-State men's golf team will tee off today at the Texas Tech Intercollegiate Golf Tournament in Lubbock, Texas.

Despite coming off its highest finish of the season at the Woodlands Intercollegiate earlier this month, Coach Mark Elliott said uncertainty still faces the team.

> The team has not played as well as I thought they would.
> • MARK ELLIOT
> MENS' GOLF COACH

"There are a lot of question marks," Elliott said. "The team has not played as well as I thought they would."

Among those making the trip to Lubbock for K-State is junior B. J. Walter, who led the Cats in the individual standings at the Woodlands Intercollegiate.

Also competing for the Cats are senior Chad Buckridge and juniors Brant Benninga and Zachary Clark. Competing in his first collegiate tournament is freshman Dan Demory.

The Cats will face strong competition in the 17-team tournament field, Elliott said, especially from the Texas schools and with Drake University, which has won two tournaments this year.

Elliott said Nebraska, which has been playing well of late, also looks to be a factor in the competition.

Elliott said Walter has been playing pretty well in qualifying play, but the rest of the team needs to step up and play at the tournament level.

"Chad has not played as well as he expected to play. He hasn't played as well as I expected him to play," Elliott said. "There are a lot of question marks."

JOHN BALMER
staff writer

The K-State women's golf team began play today at the Lady Trojan Invitational in Little Rock, Ark.

Coming off a less-than-satisfying eighth-place finish at the Marilyn Smith Invitational last weekend, the Cats hit the greens today hoping for improvement.

"We still have different things to improve on before winter break," Coach Kristi Knight said. "The upcoming tournament field is one we should do well in."

The Wildcats will face Arkansas and Wichita State, an in-state rival the Cats are still looking to topple for the first time. But, junior Ann Slater said the team must focus on the entire field if success is to come.

"It's a good pack of some pretty competitive teams," Slater said.

The tournament marks the last competition for the Cats before the winter break. The off time will give injured freshman Carrie Chambers time to recuperate. Knight said she hoped to make good of this situation by finding players capable of stepping up during Chambers' absence.

"Our team is not completely set yet," Knight said. "I hope this tournament will help in finding out who should fill them."

The first part of the Big 12 season is almost completed, and the Cats have shown they are capable of competing for the top. When asked about the first half of Big 12 play, Knight said she felt Texas and Oklahoma State were the class of the conference.

However, she said she believed the second part of the season could prove anybody worthy of wearing the Big 12 crown. The Big 12 Tournament is in April.

"There's a lot of time between now and April," Knight said. "Anybody, including us, could end up on top. We'll see in the spring."

A&M fans serve as 12th Man, K-State fans travel to Texas

SHANA NEWELL
sports editor

COLLEGE STATION, Texas — It started Jan. 1, 1922.

E. King Gill, a basketball player for the Aggies, attended the Dixie Classic, the forerunner to the Cotton Bowl. Texas A&M was facing Centre College in its first-ever bowl game.

Gill had played for the Aggies' gridiron squad, and he asked then-coach Dana X. Bible to assist in spotting players in the press box.

Near the end of the first half, Bible called Gill down to the field.

There had been several injuries to Aggie players, and Bible wanted to be ready in case A&M ran out of players.

There were no dressing rooms at the stadium in 1922, so Gill changed into the uniform of one of the injured players under the stands.

He stood on the sidelines for the rest of the game, ready to play, but never did.

The Aggies went on to win 22-14, and the 12th Man tradition was born.

Nearly 75 years later, the Aggies still call on the 12th Man to help lead their team to victory.

But now, the 12th Man is not Gill, or a football player, but the crowd.

Today, Aggie fans stand and sway throughout football games, in the spirit of Gill.

For visiting teams, the tradition makes Kyle Field one of the toughest places to play.

"We knew coming down here it was going to be tough playing here," K-State wide receiver Andre Anderson said. "We just tried to use it to our advantage. We told each other, 'They're cheering for us.' "

> Their fans stepped up by making so much noise it interfered with our audibles and our substitutions.
> • JOE GORDON
> SENIOR CORNERBACK

But then the crowd started swaying from side to side and waving its 12th Man towels while singing the school's fight song.

"That swaying motion, ah man, that could make you sick," Anderson said.

It's their swaying motion that makes playing at Kyle Field more difficult than anywhere else, even Memorial Stadium in Lincoln, Neb., Anderson said.

"It's just as loud, but I think here, their movements and all that, it gets into you more if you pay attention to it," he said.

But as loud as the crowd was, K-State Coach Bill Snyder said the support the Aggie fans gave their team was incredible.

"I don't think they were hostile at all. I think that's a misnomer," Snyder said. "They were a good crowd, really supportive of their team, and they did some things to get them back in the ballgame."

What they did was create a noise so deafening it made it difficult for K-State's offense to communicate.

"During the first half, they weren't really a factor," senior cornerback Joe Gordon said. "But in the second half, when it was crunch time, their fans stepped up by making so much noise it interfered with our audibles and our substitutions."

But Aggie fans weren't the only ones in the stands.

There were Wildcat fans, too, and they showed up in droves.

K-State was allocated 4,000 tickets by the Big 12 Conference, but by Snyder's estimates, there were at least 5,000.

Those 5,000 purple-clad fans made a difference, Snyder said.

"If you want to talk about crowds, how about K-State's crowd? That was probably the best thing that happened to us tonight," he said.

"Our fans came to support us, and that's a long way to go. It's not easy for a regular Joe to jump up and fly anywhere."

Irish eyes continue to cry after poll slide

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — This is getting all too familiar. For the second time in three weeks, Notre Dame is trying to figure out how things went so terribly wrong.

"I stood out here three weeks ago and said the same thing," Ron Powlus said after Air Force shocked Notre Dame 20-17 in overtime. "It's hard. This season's horrible."

It's not going to get better anytime soon, either. The loss dropped the Irish 11 spots to No. 19, and any faint hope left after the Ohio State loss of getting back into the national championship race is now gone.

Notre Dame is also facing the very real prospect of staying home for the holidays for the first time since 1986. The Irish must meet three conditions to qualify for the alliance bowls, including being ranked among the top 12 bowl-eligible teams in either the Associated Press or USA Today/CNN polls.

They have five games left — Navy, Boston College, Pitt, Rutgers and Southern Cal — but none will give them a significant boost in the polls without losses by higher-ranked teams.

There are no other arrangements if Notre Dame doesn't qualify for an alliance bowl, but that could change.

First, Notre Dame must regroup from its loss to Air Force. Lou Holtz would prefer to get his players right back out on the field, but they don't play again until their Nov. 2 game against Navy in Ireland. They won't even practice until Thursday, because Holtz sent everyone home for Notre Dame's mid-semester break after the game.

That gives the Irish plenty of time to brood about how different things could have been. Since 1994, Notre Dame has a 19-10-1 record that includes losses to teams like Boston College and Air Force.

"Hasn't this senior class gone through enough?" Powlus asked. "Haven't we?"

But the Irish have no one to blame but themselves. After losing to Ohio State on Sept. 28, the Notre Dame players could at least console themselves with the fact that they were beaten by one of the best teams.

Air Force is the same team that lost to Navy last week.

"We need to handle this with class," Holtz said. "Is it easy to take? No. We have no excuses. We have to come out and play."

And Notre Dame didn't. Even though Air Force needed Dallas Thompson's 27-yard field goal in overtime, the Falcons controlled the game all afternoon.

They held the Irish to just 67 yards rushing, the lowest total since Holtz has been coach. Things looked bleak early when Air Force quarterback Beau Morgan rushed for more yardage in one play (33 yards) than the entire Notre Dame team in the first half (27 yards).

This was the same Notre Dame that rushed for 397 yards just last week against then-No. 16 Washington.

"Right from the get-go, I knew we were in trouble," right tackle Mike Doughty said. "We just couldn't get anything together."

Powlus tried to pick up the slack and had one of the best afternoons of his college career. He completed 16 of 24 passes for 268 yards and set a Notre Dame record for consecutive completions (11) when he connected with Shannon Stephens on an 18-yard pass midway through the second quarter.

But he was also sacked three times and fumbled four times, and his last miscue set up Air Force's game-winning field goal in overtime. As he went back to throw, Joe Suhajda hit Powlus and stripped the ball away. Alex Pupich recovered, and the Falcons started at the Irish 25.

Afterward, Powlus could offer no explanations or excuses.

"Air Force just played a great game and we played a bad game," he said. "I don't know what to say. We're shocked."

Wildcats breeze past Cyclones, Tigers in weekend volleyball tournament

DAN LEWERENZ
sports writer

It wasn't the toughest weekend, and it wasn't the most important in terms of conference standings, but K-State's back-to-back 3-0 routs of Iowa State and Missouri last weekend gave the Wildcats a chance to show off their depth.

The wins moved K-State, ranked No. 25 in the nation, to 18-3 overall, 6-2 in Big 12 play.

The Cats entered the fray with their regular starters against Iowa State and cruised to a 15-5 win in game one. K-State led 14-5 before allowing the Cyclones to rally, but a kill by freshman swing hitter Abbie Brown gave the serve back to the Cats, and a block by setter Devon Ryning and Kate DeClerk put the first game away.

The subs started in game two, with junior defensive specialist Val Phillips putting on a show from the service line. Phillips, playing for starting play-set-hitter Toie Young, served back-to-back aces to start a five-point run midway through the game.

"I think it's a relaxation thing," Phillips said. "I just try to go in and play relaxed."

After winning game two 15-12, the Cats had a hard time establishing themselves in game three. K-State rushed out to a four-point lead, but the Cyclones fought back to 4-4.

After seesawing through the middle of the game, Young fought off a sore shoulder to put away a pair of kills and an ace, and assisted DeClerk on a block, re-establishing the Cats' lead at 11-7.

Iowa State scored twice more, but the Cats had the last four points of the match, closing the Cyclones out on an ace by swing hitter Kim Zschau.

K-State had trouble putting away all three games, allowing points or side-outs after reaching match point in every game.

"I don't know why," Coach Jim Moore said. "Sometimes you relax, and you don't do the particular things in the game that you need. You let down a little bit."

But ultimately it didn't matter. K-State out-hit the Cyclones .286 to .189 and out-blocked them nine to four. Brown's 16 kills led all attackers, followed by 15 from Zschau. Phillips finished with four of K-State's eight aces, while Iowa State failed to serve a single ace.

"Val came in and played really well," Moore said. "There's no way I can say enough about Val Phillips. She's a tremendous worker, and she's adjusted well to playing a decreased role this season."

The Wildcats cruised in Saturday's match against Missouri, sweeping the Tigers 15-5, 15-8, 15-4.

"This has been a brutal, unforgiving schedule for us this year," Moore said. "We needed things to go easy for us a bit."

And it was play like Dawn Cady's that made the match look so easy. With the score knotted at 2-2, the freshman outside hitter served an ace — her first of seven in the match — to start an eight-point run. When Cady regained the serve, she led the Cats to four more points, including another ace that gave K-State game one.

"We've had a dilemma since the beginning of the year in that we brought people in who are good, and we didn't know where to play them," Moore said. "We knew Dawn was good, but she had to fill in as our first middle blocker, our first swing hitter, our first right side, so it was hard for her to find her place. I've believed all year long Dawn has the best serve on the team, outside of Devon."

Phillips and redshirt freshman setter Linsey Luther both hit 1.000, Phillips scoring on her only attack and Luther landing two-for-two. Zschau led the Cats with nine kills and seven digs.

But the most inspirational sight of the match was injured senior swing hitter Kelli Luther taking the floor in her first start of the season. Kelli Luther, who tore her anterior cruciate ligament in preseason drills and is also fighting a cartilage tear in her knee, has played only one other point this season, serving for the match against Kansas.

"It felt really good to stand out there and feel like I'd made it back," said Kelli Luther, whose four digs were good for third on the team. "It's difficult playing defense instead of playing on the front, but it's good to play.

"Hopefully I'll be able to go in more now that my knee is starting to get a little better. The brace is helping, but I still have to get used to playing with it and not favoring it when I play."

Moore said Kelli Luther's presence helps the entire team perform at its best, and he wanted to give her a chance to play with her sister, Linsey Luther.

"It's not always the person who plays that's having the biggest impact on the team," he said. "When Kelli went in to serve match point against Kansas, everybody's face lit up. The thing tonight was to get Kelli and Linsey playing together."

600 campers gather for a prime shot at their goal — season tickets for basketball season

The falling of the leaves, the crispness of the air — fall is here. And with fall comes one of K-State's most hallowed traditions.

Campout.

More than 600 students earned first shot at season tickets for the men's basketball season by participating in the annual ticket campout, a three-day, two-night celebration of school spirit.

The campout ran from Tuesday morning to Thursday afternoon, with groups separated into ICAT and non-ICAT campers. One didn't have to camp out to get tickets, but each group had to be represented around the clock until tickets went on sale Thursday morning.

"We got here at 7 a.m. Tuesday morning," Brent Strothman, freshman in architectural engineering and representative from the Group, said.

The Group consisted of a group of friends not affiliated with any living organization, but most campout groups were either from greek organizations or residence halls.

"People just signed up for a time to be our rep," Angie Lucas, sophomore in public relations and representative from Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity and Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority, said. The Lambda Chis and Kappas combined to make one campout group.

"Me and Tara Gray and Lindsay Meetz filled in most of the spots when no one else could make it."

Because basketball was the theme, campers got a chance to see some hoops. The men's basketball team delivered pizza Tuesday night, and the women's team brought donuts Wednesday morning. Wednesday afternoon the men's team treated campers to an intrasquad scrimmage.

But in the great outdoors, campers were forced to devise their own amusement. Some brought music, and others hooked up electric generators to power televisions for a late-night movie marathon.

BRANDON WHITE/Collegian

KRISTIN McDONALD, junior in kinesiology, passes the time by reading Tuesday afternoon.

Tuesday night, a streaker dashed through the campgrounds, just ahead of a K-State Police patrol car.

"It's really as fun as you make it," Travis Larson, sophomore in agriculture education and representative from the Alpha Gamma Rho campout group, said. "Some do a little more than others, but I think everyone had fun."

That is, everyone had fun until early Thursday morning, when a cold front brought the final element of the fall season to the campout — cold weather.

"About 5 a.m. I woke up freezing," Eric Winter, sophomore undecided and Acacia representative, said.

Although the weather change dampened the spirits of some, no rain fell to dampen the surroundings.

"It got cold last night," Lucas said. "But it still didn't get as cold as last year. I think it went really well."

Was the campout a success? Fewer people participated than last year, Marcia Hellwig, Athletic Ticket Sales Committee chair, said she estimated 200-250 people camped out at one point or another, but basketball ticket sales are down overall as well.

"The numbers are down, but in proportion to the overall ticket sales I think they're OK," she said.

Most important, campout was incident-free. Only one group was dismissed, and that group never showed up in the first place.

"Definitely, the numbers have seemed to go down," Larson said. "But it's been fun.

"I'll definitely do it next year. I just don't want to be in charge."

'Barber of Seville' full of fantastic surprises

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Until Thursday night I had never been to an opera. The only thing I knew about Rossini's opera "The Barber of Seville" was watching the Looney Tunes version of Figaro's song. I was fairly certain it was not an accurate portrayal.

When we first took our seats at McCain Auditorium, the scenery caught my eyes.

I was expecting something serious, but this looked fun and lighthearted.

It was the front of a house, with red double doors and white shuttered windows. But the walls were painted like a blue cloudy sky. Whimsical!

Now I'm not much for symbolism, but the blue-cloudy-sky motif tied the opera together in several places to be revealed later on in the program.

Needless to say, I was happy that for once I caught on right away.

Once the lights went down and the music came up, I was a little worried about myself, because the first music I heard sounded like chase music from more Looney Tunes cartoons.

I began to wonder if I would look for Tweety and Sylvester all night.

The opera was full of fantastic surprises.

I had always thought of opera as dreary, but it was pure entertainment.

The story was so classical you could almost tell what was happening, even without the supertitles. They came in handy, though.

I admired all the performers, but especially Ted Christopher, who played the barber, Figaro, with brilliance.

He relished his role. When the curtains parted for his solo scene, we were treated to the sight of Figaro sleeping in his bed with its blue-cloudy-sky covered bedding repeating the whimsical motif.

Clad only in white shorts, shirt and socks, Figaro proceeded to dress while singing his own praises.

Finally, the moment I was waiting for had arrived — the Figaro song!

And it arrived early enough in the opera that I didn't have to spend most of the night in anxious anticipation.

I'd definitely say Christopher's version far outdid the cartoon version.

How does someone sing with such verve while dressing? I guess if it weren't opera it wouldn't be so impressive. I was impressed by his costume, too, especially the blue — and — white cloud motif suspenders. These brightened the black, white and red he wore. Most of the costumes were black, white and red, which suited the setting of 18th-century Seville.

> "After the humerous rendition of Figaro's scale, the opera moved on at a merry pace. The gist of the story is that a certain Count Almeviva is smitten with Rosina, a beautiful and wealthy young lady, who is the ward of Dr. Bartelo."

After the humorous rendition of Figaro's solo, the opera moved on at a merry pace.

The gist of the story is that a certain Count Almaviva is smitten with Rosina, a beautiful and wealthy young lady, who is the ward of Dr. Bartolo. The doctor is scheming to marry Rosina. Rosina is plotting her escape from the doctor's insufferable grip. Almaviva pines to be with Rosina and enlists the aid of Figaro. Figaro is the champion of lovers everywhere, for a fee.

All the principals played their parts with style and flair. The count was persistent and charming. The doctor was foppish and foolish. Rosina was spoiled and self-centered.

Credit must go to the secondary characters and even the chorus for adding all those extra touches that make a production really fly. For example, Don Basilio, Rosina's music teacher, was stupid and funny, with a voice as deep as his dumbness.

Berta, the maid, sang a wonderfully foolish solo and provided a solid comical performance throughout the production.

All in all, the performances complemented one another.

Even the times when more than one person sang on stage, the voices overlapped nicely without blending, and no one voice overran the others.

The only criticism I have is the orchestra threatened to drown out a voice here or there, but it only happened once or twice and lasted for only a few moments.

Other than that, the orchestra maintained a decent backdrop for the voices.

Of course, as can be expected, the opera ended with a happily-ever-after wedding scene and all the loose ends tied up in a ribbon.

The finishing touches were especially nice. The newlyweds wore outfits made from material that matched the blue-cloudy-sky theme.

I think that summed up the theme of the opera beautifully: It's always darkest before the dawn. When the sun comes up on a place inhabited with people like Figaro, the barber of Seville, life is as light and fluffy as a cloud.

Concert is success

Debbie Hollis
staff reporter

It was packed.

The concert in memory of Paul "Doc" Shull, former K-State professor of music, filled the house Saturday night at the Manhattan Center for the Arts.

The Manhattan Center for the Arts sponsored "Brass, Bells, Boogie and Root Beer." The concert brought together former colleagues and students of Shull's to share Doc stories and perform a variety of music.

Overall, the concert was one of the best productions the Manhattan Center for the Arts is bound to produce this season. Even for those who did not know Shull, the evening brought his music and humor to life.

After performances by the K-State Trumpet Ensemble and a French horn quartet, the energy started to flow, and the talent started to shine.

Rhapsody Ringers, a hand-bell choir, got away from the traditional Sunday-morning-church sound bell choirs often have.

The ringers captivated the audience with their creative mix of rhythm and bells. Incorporating a variety of whistles, party blowers and even some confetti, they shared their joy of playing with the audience early on.

Sunflower Brass was next to entertain. It offered proof that horns played well are among life's most priceless beauties. Its smooth, dynamic sound brought to life the old classics of Reiche, Telemann and Handel.

In contrast, its relaxed style showed through as it played a couple of Dixieland jazz numbers and members danced in their chairs.

It served as the perfect introduction for the Manhattan Barefoot Dixieland Band.

The band entertained not only with its music but with its comical side comments between pieces.

Toes tapping and knees bouncing, the audience erupted with laughter when a penny was thrown on stage in response to a comment about the money brought up to the band during its normal performances.

Daryl Batchelor, a former student of Shull's, performed an amazing trumpet solo, which brought tears to the eyes of many listeners.

Though he said he was nervous, the minute he began playing, Batchelor was lost in his passion for the music, and so was the audience.

The concert ended with an awe-inspiring performance on the bells by Shull's son, Kevin.

No recording could have done his performance justice, because half the amazement was in watching him. He shuffled the bells with a graceful speed and still brought forth such a rich sound that mouths gaped in wonder.

E-mail teaches language skills

K-State students are sending Japanese students e-mail.

Students in level three and four Japanese language classes are corresponding with Japanese students at the Tezu Kayama University in Japan.

"American students send mail written in Japanese and receive mail from Japanese students written in English," Neil Johnson, senior in computer science, said.

> "It's really unusual, because there are basically three different Japanese alphabets. One are the symbols, one is pictures, and the other you can use English letters."
> • MIO NAKAMURA
> GRADUATE STUDENT IN HOTEL AND RESTAURANT MANAGEMENT

The program, which the Japanese-language professors designed, has been running for two weeks.

"This gives the students a good chance to use their other language and communicate with each other," Mio Nakamura, graduate student in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Nakamura said students get a lot of in-class speaking practice but not enough time to write.

"Students can learn young Japanese culture from people their age," Nakamura said. "The students share their daily life, hobbies and university activities."

The e-mail is used as a class tool. The professors read and correct students' messages.

"It's really unusual, because there are basically three different Japanese alphabets. One are the Japanese symbols, one is pictures, and the other you can use English letters," Nakamura said.

Each English keyboard letter stands for certain Japanese characters. Nakamura said if you look on the computer screen, you would see recognizable English letters, but it only makes sense in Japanese.

"We use the American alphabet to write Japanese," Nakamura said. "If you look at it, it really doesn't make sense at all."

Natives help others

■ Professors and students share cultural differences.

The K-State Japanese language classes are being taught by two Japanese natives. Students and instructors are helping each other learn.

Setsuo Imaoka and Noriko Fukahara are teaching Japanese 1, 3 and 5 this semester while the regular professor is on maternity leave.

Imaoka was a business executive in Tokyo for 36 years. After he retired last year, he was interested in teaching.

Fukahara decided after completion of her thesis at a Japanese university that teaching Japanese and learning American culture would be interesting.

Imaoka and Fukahara found their way to America through the International Internship Program. IIP sends out about 100 teachers worldwide. There are 20 instructors teaching in the United States this year.

Imaoka and Fukahara have an adviser to help them teach. The adviser helps to teach them existing teaching methodology and what to focus on.

"We just came from Japan two months ago, where some of the professors have been here for years. We add fresh, contemporary topics and can show what the Japanese are doing today," Imaoka said.

The two instructors make learning the Japanese language more in-depth, because it's not just learning to speak it. The professors and students trade cultures.

"I wanted to know American culture, and I wanted to introduce Japanese culture to America, so I came here," Fukahara said.

Both instructors use the culture they grew up in to help students understand the Japanese language.

"We've lived in Japan for long, long years and we know human relations, the way we act and talk, and the way to be polite and humble," Imaoka said.

Those are some of the things that make the two cultures so different and hard to understand.

Both said American culture is different from Japanese culture.

"Your country is very free and equal. In our country we should be very polite to elders, parents and foreigners," Imaoka said. "Here, teachers and students are equal. In our classes we are trying to teach that the teacher is special."

Teaching students is a trade-off. The students get a chance to learn real Japanese culture, and the instructors learn about the United States from the students.

"We can improve our English abilities and exchange cultural views with students," Imaoka said.

Neil Johnson, senior in computer science, said the instructors are both a tremendous asset.

"They came straight from Japan, and they give a good picture of what it's really like," Johnson said.

Suicide affects Seattle

Associated Press

SEATTLE — When grunge rocker Kurt Cobain's life of artistic brilliance and personal turmoil ended with a shotgun blast to the head, it seemed like the classic trigger for an explosion of copycat suicides.

While there was a big jump in suicide crisis calls in Cobain's hometown, there was just one clear imitation suicide, according to a study published in the journal "Suicide and Life-Threatening Behavior."

More research is needed to determine whether that was also the case nationally, because the local sample was too small to yield meaningful results, cautioned David Phillips, a leading scientist on the issue.

David Jobes, a Catholic University psychology professor in Washington, D.C., and the study's chief author, was at a conference of suicide prevention specialists when Cobain's body was discovered at the Nirvana singer's home on April 8, 1994.

"We just looked at each other and said, 'This is going to be a disaster.' We were convinced," Jobes said in a telephone interview Friday.

The study cites the response by the Crisis Clinic in Seattle, the way news media covered the suicide and community efforts to prevent a ripple effect as likely factors in preventing suicides.

"We were shocked. We were truly shocked by what didn't happen," Jobes said.

Celebrity suicides spark national suicide-rate increases averaging 1 percent for about a month and as much as 10 percent for superstars like actress Marilyn Monroe in 1962, said Phillips, a sociology professor at the University of California, San Diego.

"I would imagine, in the case of Cobain, the effect might be the same size (as Monroe) or maybe a bit smaller," Phillips said.

In four weeks after Cobain's death, 18 suicides were recorded in Seattle and the rest of King County, including the grunge megastar and an obvious copycat, a 28-year-old man who had just attended a candlelight vigil a few days after Cobain's body was found.

SPEED

▶ Scientists need further research to determine if Kurt Cobain's suicide caused a increase in suicide crisis calls regionally and nationally.

"I would say it's inconclusive, and it will remain inconclusive until the same study can be done on a national or at least a larger scale," Phillips said.

Jobes said he lacked the resources for a nationwide study but suggested that if any place would have experienced a sizable ripple effect it would have been Seattle, where Nirvana had its strongest following.

Oakley High School athlete dies during fourth quarter of game

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLEY — A high-school football player was pronounced dead after collapsing during a game in western Kansas.

Kevin Zimmerman, a quarterback and defensive back for Oakley High School, came off the field in the fourth quarter with about five minutes left in Friday night's game against Hoisington, a high school in central Kansas.

Zimmerman told coaches he needed to be replaced, school officials said.

He then collapsed and was taken to the Logan County Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

The hospital would not release the cause of his death.

"He came to the sideline and said he wasn't feeling well," Jim Keenan, the school's athletic director, said Saturday. "Then he was gone."

Zimmerman was a multi-sports star at Oakley, lettering in track and basketball as well as football, in which he had received all-state honorable mention at defensive back.

"He had the desire to perform," Keenan said. "You wish you had a dozen like him, so you could produce a super team. He tried to be a leader by showing others to work hard, but he didn't want any of the glory."

Only a week ago, Charles "Bud" Ward, assistant coach of the Oakley football team, died of cancer.

Keenan said counseling would be available Monday for the 195 students who attend Oakley High School. Zimmerman's funeral will be Tuesday.

Bill Korf, pastor of the St. Joseph Church in Oakley, called Zimmerman one of the finest young men in Oakley.

"He was a top-notch kid," Korf said. "We lost a good one out there."

Because of the player's death, members of Oakley's volleyball and cross country teams passed up the Northwest Kansas League championships Saturday, and members of the debate team did not take part in a tournament.

▶ K-STATE-SALINA

Students place in regionals, qualify for national aviation competition

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Some students from K-State-Salina's campus are heading for the wild blue yonder beyond Kansas.

Their team placed third in last week's National Intercollegiate Flying Association Region Six Safety Conference. In April, the team heads for Battle Creek, Mich., and the NIFA Nationals. The team had to place in the top three to qualify for nationals.

"We have never been to the nationals, so we're really excited," Dave Pianalto, team coach, said.

Pianalto said his team talked to the Central Missouri State team, which said it was planning to have a mini-SAFECON in the spring to compare and take notes. The K-State team plans to practice once or twice a week for now.

"Come spring, we plan to practice twice weekly," he said.

Pianalto said he would like to enlarge the team because it would enhance its chances at competition time. Bigger schools take 25-30 people, and some specialize in certain events.

"As a school, we plan to compete in all the events. Individuals can choose to compete in as few as one or as many as all the events," Pianalto said.

People who are well-versed in ground events top Pianalto's list, because that was the team's weakest event. But he thinks with time and practice the team will improve in the ground events.

"If we can improve in every area, that will help our chances overall. We're all real excited. I was going to be real disappointed if we did not make it this time," he said.

Pianalto said it was prestigious to compete in the nationals with the top 25-30 schools.

"We will be meeting a lot of people. You can get jobs out of this," he said. "The recognition is the best part, really."

Mary Ann Littrell, Manhattan resident, said her son, Matt Littrell, participated in the competition. A third-year student in the professional pilot program at Salina, he took fourth place in the navigation event, second in aircraft identification and second in aircraft simulation.

"This is the third year he has participated. He has done very well in the past, so it was no surprise to me he did well this time," Mary Ann Littrell said.

Although no one else in the family flies, Matt Littrell showed interest in flying for a long time. Manhattan High School used to offer a course in aviation that was basically ground school, she said.

"Matt took the course and passed ground school, so we decided he might as well go and get his regular license. He soloed on his 16th birthday and got his license for his 17th birthday," she said. "He flew a plane solo before he drove his grandfather's car."

programs will help develop a community of voters. By focusing on young people, I'll reach families, too.

"It's important for everyone to know more about all levels of county government."

Galitzer has lived in Riley County for 25 years.

"I think I know a lot about the community, and I think I can get the community more involved in what county government has to offer," she said.

The opposing candidate, Vargo, a Republican, said an accounting background is his advantage because of the amount of budget and tax work processed by the county clerk.

For the past five years, Vargo has been an accountant in the county treasurer's office.

He has accounting experience in the private sector as a mutual-fund accountant and income-tax preparer and consultant.

Vargo said his position in the Riley County treasurer's office familiarized him with the departments of county government and the people.

"The county departments work together," he said. "My goal is to maintain a professional, efficient office that provides friendly service."

Vargo said one way to do this would be to have a cross-trained staff, in which everyone would have some familiarity with all the duties of the office.

"If someone is gone or needs extra help, anyone can step in," he said.

Responsibilities of county clerk

Job Title: County clerk

Job description:

- ✓ Coordinate all elections including registering voters and all filings to run for a position except for Manhattan City Commissioners (small cities can file either with the small city's clerk or county clerk)
- ✓ Manage accounts payable for Riley County
- ✓ Oversee pay roll, health insurance and all leave time for county employees
- ✓ Sell fishing and gaming licenses
- ✓ Keep track of all real-estate ownership records
- ✓ Collect proposed budgets from township officers, set levy and approve budgets
- ✓ Process all intangible taxes
- ✓ Act as secretary on the Board of County Commissioners (agenda and minutes)
- ✓ File legal documents for county commissioners (any contracts, agreements, resolutions)
- ✓ Schedule county commissioners' appointments

Dynamic singer fills McCain with talent

CHARLE SIOUX CHARLETON
staff writer

Soprano vocalist Kee-ok Kim Chung is a dynamo. Her voice ranges from soprano to alto.

It could be so loud it rocked the rafters and so quiet it whispered on Friday night in McCain Auditorium. Each song in Chung's repertoire presented a different aspect of her voice.

Through her outstanding stage presence, Chung made the music understandable, no matter what the language. She sang every song in a manner that made it easy to comprehend, whether it was in Korean, French, Italian or English.

But her singing wasn't the only part of her performing personality. She had a dynamic sense of showmanship. For example, her facial expressions and hand gestures alone conveyed much of the sense of songs.

Costuming played an important part in Chung's performance. She changed costume four times, twice into traditional Korean garb and twice into Western clothing.

In her first Korean costume, Chung looked like a peach butterfly. Her voice floated like one, too.

Her next change, into a sensational black-and-white gown, carried with it a sense of the drama of her performance. And there was a dramatic difference in her performance.

She performed for her audience. She looked at people and smiled when she sang. An extremely graceful performer, Chung was a pleasure to watch as well as to hear.

After a brief intermission, the audience returned to its seats, and Chung returned to the stage in her second Korean outfit. She looked like a tiny, delicate doll, but, as before, the strength of her voice dispelled that image.

At the end of the program, she was joined in a duet by Jerry Langenkamp, Department of Music chairman for voice and director of the opera program. Their voices were well-matched. It was obvious the two enjoyed performing together, and that added to the audience's pleasure.

Chung had arranged the evening so anyone attending could sit back and relax. It was a nice little break from the day-to-day struggles of school, work and home.

It's too bad more people at K-State didn't get to find out just how talented this woman is. If you missed Kee-ok Kim Chung's performance Friday, you missed an opportunity to see a first-class talent.

Keep your eyes and ears open. I predict you'll be seeing and hearing more of Kee-ok Kim Chung.

and George Fiedler."

Fiedler's wife, Alice Fiedler, donated $5 million in his memory for a library and another half-million dollars for a professorship in his name.

Rathbone credits much of his success to the people at K-State, from the president all the way to the students. He said he received excellent support from faculty, staff and students at the school and support from alumni everywhere.

"That's necessary if you want to have great scholarships to attract the top students," Rathbone said. "I also received great support for the last 10 years from the people in Anderson (Hall). Jon Wefald is very gracious and provides tremendous leadership."

Rathbone came to K-State in August 1973. Before that, he was a professor and department chair at the University of Idaho. He first taught at the University of Pittsburgh, where he received his doctorate. He received his bachelor's degree from Purdue University and a master's degree from Northwestern University. All his degrees are in electrical engineering.

Rathbone received a special life-achievement award for service to minority students at K-State. He provided aggressive leadership to broaden the representation of minority students and faculty in the College of Engineering and at K-State.

"Engineering traditionally has been the domain of white males. My objective was to get more minorities and women interested in engineering," he said.

The program has been such a success that the college employs a full-time director. The program has a two-fold objective — to recruit minorities and women and to retain them. Rathbone said merely recruiting minorities is not enough; he also wants to ensure their success.

2000

For some of the Information Systems applications, the incapability to register the year-2000 dates will not be as big of a concern as others. For example, people who apply to K-State will know they applied in the year 2000 and not 1900, but programs used to tell how long a student has been in school would read a negative number.

"We are looking at what we need to do to get out of the mess," Streeter said.

He said Information Systems will probably be working right up to the end of this millennium, but he is confident the year-2000 accommodation will be completed.

He said vendor-supported applications will be serviced by the vendor.

"I think we will find ways of solving the problem as we go along, and there is no sense panicking. There is no simple fix that you can do in an instant," Streeter said.

Once In A Lifetime

Your engagement and wedding are special moments in your life. The Kansas State Collegian will help you share the news with your K-State family. For only $12 for an engagement or $15 for a wedding, you can put your announcement in the "Once in a Lifetime" special section.

To publish your announcement stop by Kedzie 118.

Congratulations New Initiates!
